

Youth Movement

Chris Brockman

In the 50s we were rebels without a cause,
instinctive and inarticulate.

In the 60s we were rebels without a pause,
in the service of the great particulate.

In the 70s we grew increasingly aware of our flaws;
participatory democracy.

In the 80s we were consumers without a cause;
security autocracy.

In the 90s we discovered natural laws
far superior to social engineering,
and joined invisible hands
as the millennium was nearing.
