Educator seeking state board position

By Terri Redmond
Staff Writer

Among those carefully watching election returns Nov. 4 will be a member of OU who has a personal interest in the outcome. Carroll Hutton, assistant dean of continuing education at OU, is running for a seat on the State Board of Education.

The State Board of Education is a very important policy setting board, says Hutton, with the responsibility for overall policy, programs, and activities for public education. The Board's eight members serve eight year terms. Terms are staggered so two members stand for election every two years, running on the partisan ballot as Democrats or Republicans.

Hutton was nominated by the Democrats in August. Two Republicans and two Democrats are running for the two available seats.

THE BOARD currently is made up of four Republicans and four Democrats, but Hutton isn't happy with the even split.

"In my opinion committees and boards shouldn't be evenly divided," he said. "One side should have a majority."

The Board meets twice a month, with each meeting lasting two days. Board members receive no salary. "It has to be a labor of love," Hutton said.

In this election year, candidates field many questions relating to the tax propositions. Hutton calls Proposal D, the Tisch amendment, "one of the worst things that could possibly happen to us at this time with the Michigan economy in its present state. Unfortunately, people compare the Tisch amendment with Proposition 13 in California, which is comparing two distinct and different situations," he said.

When Proposition 13 passed, Hutton said, the state had a $5 billion treasury surplus. In the past fiscal year, the state of Michigan has had a $230 million deficit.

Hutton agrees that the state tax system needs revision. He calls the property tax unfair and regressive.

"I favor a progressive income tax, based on the ability to pay," he said, adding that the state economy is not in a position at this time to switch to a progressive income tax as a means of financing state services.

Hutton, who joined OU as assistant dean of Labor Education in September, has a forty year background in public education. He graduated from the Navy Trade School in 1942, and received an honorary associates degree from Mott Community College in Flint. He acknowledges his background doesn't include impressive academic credentials, but says, "My biggest and best education came from working in and with public education."

FOR THE LAST twenty years Hutton has served as director of the International Union Education Program for the UAW, working to make educational services available to adults who never had the chance to go to college. He has worked with over 100 colleges and universities to develop labor studies programs.

Hutton is working to expand OU's fifteen year old labor education program "to involve more trade unions by developing outreach programs for local unions who never had the opportunity to participate in the OU program." Courses are held in Milford, and a program is being developed in St. Clair County. Classes are offered in stress management, assertiveness, and collective bargaining.

Hutton said his major accomplishment in education came recently when President Carter signed the Life Long Learning Act into law. Hutton testified in support of the bill before the House Committee on Education and Labor in June, 1979. The bill, in language almost directly from Hutton's testimony, calls for "emphasis on increasing access for adults not served by traditional educational programs."

"LIFE LONG learning is extremely important," Hutton said. Education is available to the young, but it must become more available to adults who couldn't get a higher education when they were young, he added. These adults are now locked into lower paying jobs with little future, he said.

"When I was a student, I reached the pinnacle — I graduated from high school," he said. Many people did not, and they should have the chance to continue their education now, Hutton said.

Campaigning keeps Hutton busy most evenings and weekends. He addresses Democratic political meetings, clubs, and get-togethers.

Hutton limits his office-seeking aspirations to the State Board of Education.

"I feel that if I completed the eight year term, that would be the extent of my political ambitions," he said.

Headlee still supports "D"

Panel discusses Tisch cuts

By Joe Deckenbach
Staff Writer

Despite Political Science Professor Roger Marz's contention that Michigan's higher education budget would be slashed by more than 55 percent if the Tisch Amendment passes, Board of Trustees Chairman Richard Headlee still actively promotes the passage of Proposal D as a way to squelch public sector spending.

The Tisch amendment (Proposal D) was the topic of a panel discussion held in the Crocker Tuesday afternoon, with Marz, Headlee, and Frederic Shipley, professor school of economics and management participating.

Marz pointed out that out of a disposable allocable state budget of $7 billion, between $1.5 and $1.7 billion will have to be cut if Tisch passes. According to Marz, only four parts of the budget — social services, higher education, mental health, prisons and corrections — are large enough to cut back. He speculated that if the prison system became "purely custodial" and dropped all rehabilitative programs, 15 to 20 percent of its $194 million budget could be cut.

MENTAL HEALTH services would get about 48 percent of its budget cut, bringing it down to $265 million from its present $508 million a year. To accomplish this Marz says many patients would have to be released to local facilities, or simply not have any form of care. Marz added that the social services budget would be slashed by about 42 percent. There also would be a "substantial reduction — over 65 percent — from the state's higher education budget," he said.

Shipley said the passage of Tisch would result in a "shift of taxation from those in higher income levels to those in lower (levels)." There would be a change from Michigan's present progressive system of taxation to a regressive-type sales tax. Because lower income level families consume a greater portion of their income, they would be most affected by a raise in the sales tax, Shipley said.

Shipley noted that a provision of Proposal D, which mandates that no new taxes may be levied without 60 percent approval of the electorate in the first general election following legislation, will result in a considerable time lag.

More importantly, "It takes away the power of the legislature to tax, and puts it in the hands of the public," Shipley said. He said it also goes against the simple majority rule.

Headlee said public sector spending must be reduced, and that Tisch is the only proposal on the ballot that guarantees that will happen.

He said there will have to be a fiscal crisis to get the governor and the legislature to act.

"They will have to establish a whole new agenda for the 80's — a realignment of priorities," Headlee said.

"I have great hope whatever crisis' may come, that reasonable people can put the state on the right track."

Investment policy still up-in-the-air

By Jennifer John
Assistant Editor

Although a policy regarding OU's investments in companies doing business in South Africa — a nation that practices apartheid or racial segregation — was approved by OU's Board of Trustees last spring, some of the policy recommendations still have not been implemented.

At the April 16 meeting, the Board passed a resolution to adopt the "Sullivan Principles," a list of civil rights which American companies doing business in South Africa must pledge to observe. The six principles, developed by black leader Rev. Leon Sullivan, are based on a belief that divestment — withdrawal of any stocks held in U.S. firms operating in South Africa — is not the best course of action or in the best interests of South African blacks.

THE POLICY adopted by the Trustees called for Board Secretary John DeCarlo to notify each corporation in which OU held stock that OU subscribes to the Sullivan Principles.

DeCarlo said he sent letters to the six companies that do business with South Africa in which OU holds stock. The companies are Ford Motor Company, General Motors, General Foods, McLouth Steel, Ralston Purina and Texaco.

"We sent the letters in June and four out of the six companies replied," DeCarlo said. Ford Motor Company, General Motors, and Texaco said they would continue to follow the Sullivan Principles, and General Foods said it also supported the Sullivan Principles, although it had "minimal business interests in South Africa."

The final part of the Board's resolution recommended that OU implement an educational program to instruct students on the apartheid issue and the structure of South African corporations. The courses would be developed by the School of Economics and Management and the Political Science department.

According to Matthews, the educational program has not been specifically formalized and is still "up-in-the-air."

De Carlo said that within the next few weeks, meetings with Matthews, Frederick Obear, vice president, academic affairs and OU provost, and Ronald Horwitz, dean, School of Economics and Management, will be set up to discuss the program more fully.

The investment issue first came to the Board's attention in May, 1978, when former President Donald O'Dowd recommended that OU invest only in corporations which adhere to the Sullivan Principles. After O'Dowd's recommendation, the Board delayed a final decision and established a subcommittee of administrators, faculty and students to examine the issue.

Last March, this ad hoc subcommittee recommended divestment.

However, after reviewing the issue and recommendation, the Board formed its own subcommittee — consisting of trustees Richard Headlee, Alex Mair and Ken Morris.

ALL THREE subcommittee members researched the matter and each arrived at different conclusions.

According to the minutes of the April 16 Board meeting, Headlee was against divestment and supported a more "personal involvement" of the university by developing an educational program. Mair, who also did not favor divestment, felt that a formal presentation of OU's position should be made to the U.S. State Department. Morris took the strongest position, advocating divestment and maintaining that "public universities cannot adopt a neutral position with regard to violations of human rights anywhere in the world."

The approved resolution was formed by a compromise of the three members of the subcommittee.

•Election '80: Major candidates and their platforms. See pages 2 and 3.

Editor's Note: Election stories on the three major presidential candidates were prepared by Jennifer John, Assistant Editor and Ritu Sehgal, Managing Editor.

Saddled with the cumbersome weight of a dismal three and a half year record and challenged in the early stages of his reelection campaign by one whom most considered the Democratic Party's only hope of regaining the White House in 1980, Jimmy Carter will face the ultimate test next week in an election that has him running neck to neck with his chief opponent, Ronald Reagan.

Yet, Carter's reelection campaign has been rife with controversy. While the Republicans lined up behind their man in the early days of the campaign, the ranks of the Democratic Party were fraught with disunity and a portentous lack of spirit.

Democrats came to Madison Square Garden this August, divided in allegiance and prepared to bolt the convention in disputes over convention rules and the party's platform. Even though Carter won renomination, it was a lukewarm victory; Democrats united less behind their man than against the opposition.

FOR CARTER, the events of the past year couldn't have come at a worse time. The depressed state of the national economy, his handling of the hostage situation in Iran, draft registration and the concomitant threat of war, and this summer's Billygate have overshadowed his accomplishments of the past three and a half years — namely the Camp David accords, the Panama Canal treaties, and energy conservation. The Carter record, couched in high interest rates and double-digit inflation, may be the most serious liability of the Carter-Mondale reelection campaign.

Carter's life dates back to humbler beginnings on a family-owned peanut farm in Plains, Georgia. Although the Carters lived well for their times, life in a depression wracked thirties wasn't easy. At 19, Carter applied and was accepted by the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis. He graduated 59th out of a class of 820 students. He married Rosalynn Smith soon after.

Carter camp faces test of re-election

In 1948, Carter was accepted in the nuclear submarine corps of the Navy. He remained there until 1953 when he returned to Plains at the request of his mother "Miss Lillian" to salvage the family's farm operations. In 1962, he made his first bid for elective office — a newly created Georgia Senate seat covering seven counties. He lost the democratic nomination but charges of rigging the election got the results overturned and Carter ran again and won in 1963.

IN 1968, Carter ran for Governor of Georgia. He lost the election to Lester Maddox, an ardent race segregationist, but returned four years later to win the gubernatorial race. In 1972, Carter made a bid at the Democratic National Convention for the vice-presidential spot on the McGovern ticket. His efforts were rebuffed and strategists close to Carter decided if he couldn't be vice-president, he'd run for president in 1976.

Neither conservative nor liberal, candidate Carter won the 1976 election merely on the merits of being a good, honest and intelligent man who could form a good, honest, and intelligent government. The Republican Party stood in national disgrace in the wake of President Richard Nixon's resignation. Its presidential nominee, incumbent Gerald Ford, barely survived a narrow victory over his challenger, Ronald Reagan, who for years had contended that Ford wasn't conservative enough. Carter offered what the people wanted: a watershed between the upheaval of Vietnam and Watergate, and the stirrings of a new beginning.

But the Carter Presidency has been plagued since its beginnings by an uncooperative Congress and scandalous conduct on the part of those close to the administration. A challenge by Ted Kennedy seemed inevitable at the beginning of the campaign season last year. Although Kennedy lost his bid for the presidential nomination, he exacted a heavy toll from Carter — namely in the form of a liberalized Democratic platform.

The following is a summary of some of the key issues in the Democratic Party Platform:

•ECONOMY: The platform rejects high interest rates as a means of combating inflation and endorses an immediate $12 billion anti-recession program to create at least 800,000 jobs. It supports tax cuts to aid low-and-middle income Americans, and it seeks to rebuild industry by increasing productivity and minimizing government regulation.

•ENERGY: The platform proposes a massive program of residential energy conservation grants. It supports the use of federal funds to develop alternative energy resources, with a goal of using solar energy to meet 20 percent of U.S. energy needs by the year 2000. It promises to retire nuclear plants in an orderly manner and prevent oil companies from acquiring coal and solar energy plants.

•HEALTH: The platform pledges a comprehensive national health insurance plan, covering preventive, diagnostic, and catastrophic illnesses. The plan would be based on cooperation from health agencies and insurance industries.

•DEFENSE: The plank supports better pay and benefits to retain and recruit military personnel. It supports draft registration of 19 and 20-year olds — including women, and the MX cruise and Trident submarines missiles.

•WOMEN'S RIGHTS: The party vows to ensure the passage of the Equal Rights Amendment. It pledges to withhold support and campaign funds from those candidates who do not support ERA.

•ABORTION — The plank rejects a constitutional amendment banning abortions and supports federal funding of abortions for poor women.

•EDUCATION: The platform calls for increased federal spending for student aid, providing stronger government support for basic scientific research, and expanding aid to historically black colleges. It pledges extending post-secondary opportunities to students from low-and-middle-income families, older students, and minorities. It urges the establishment of a separate office within the Office of the Secretary of Education to insure full executive implementation of the President's directive on aid to minorities. The platform also commits itself to strengthening educational quality through adequate support for libraries, federal leadership in educational research and development, and improved teacher training.

The establishment of an independent Department of Education has been one of the proudest achievements of the Carter Administration. The department was created to give education a stronger, more direct voice in government, while at the same time reserving control over educational policy making and operations to states, localities, and public and private institutions.

The Administration has provided strong financial support for minorities and students with special needs, such as handicapped students and those with limited English speaking abilities. The Middle Income Student Assistance Act was adopted under the Carter Administration. The act expands need-based student financial aid to approximately one-third of the students enrolled in post-secondary education. The Administration also has pushed through several legislative, regulatory, and administrative measures to enhance benefits received by private school children from federal education programs.

However, while the platform pledges increased spending for educational needs, colleges and universities are certain to be victims in any belt-tightening scheme designed to balance the federal budget — a promise frequently made by the Carter people on the campaign trail.

ADVANCED REGISTRATION FOR WINTER SEMESTER, 1981

November 3 through November 13

Office of the Registrar 161 North Foundation Hall

All students are encouraged to register during the Advance Registration period (Monday, November 3 through Thursday, November 13), which period offers more opportunity for a full schedule and avoids the one-day, post-Christmas holiday registration.

During advance registration, students are scheduled into courses according to their class standing. There is an add-only period for advance registered students who receive only a partial schedule. Based upon demand during advance registration, academic departments are frequently able to schedule additional sections or increase class limits for certain courses.

Students who advance register will also be permitted to defer payment of their Winter tuition and fees until January 15, 1981 without penalty, unlike students who register January 6 or during the Late Registration period whose fees are due and payable at the time of registration.

For further information consult the Winter, 1981 Schedule of Classes. These will be available for pickup at the Registrar's Office on Friday, October 31 and thereafter.

A final, important note: The slotting of students into classes is based up the current rank of each student, not the day the Advance Registration form is submitted. Forms may be submitted any one of the nine days of Advance Registration.

Ronald Reagan still runs on past positions

For 25 years his pitch on the campaign trail has been the same: "A big, bureaucratic federal government, high taxes, wage and price tampering and military weakness are ruining the U.S. We need more local control of welfare, education and health programs. We need more free enterprise. And we need to constitutionally limit federal spending."

These are the words of Republican presidential candidate Ronald Reagan.

Reagan, 68, is counting on 1980 as the year his predictable speeches and audience mood come together, making him president. His vice-presidential running-mate is George Bush, who was defeated in the Republican presidential primary.

Raised in a series of small Illinois towns, Reagan attended his homestate's Eureka College, where he concentrated on football, debating and dramatics. He graduated in 1932, became a radio sportscaster and later embarked on a movie career in Hollywood.

BY THE MID-50'S, with his movie career nearly over, Reagan's interests moved toward politics. He began speaking at Republican rallies and dinners — saying much of what he says today — and in 1966, ran for governor of California. After serving two terms as governor, from 1966 to 1974, he decided to run for the Republican presidential nomination in 1976. He lost narrowly to incumbent president Gerald Ford.

Reagan married actress Nancy Davis in 1952 and they have two children. His first marriage to actress Jane Wyman ended in divorce in 1948. They had two children.

According to Reagan, he is "a good leader," who tries to find the fairest answer to problems by applying "common sense."

"I've been speaking for a great many years about the wrong track government has been on," Reagan recently said. "I think there are some things that need to be done. I'd like the opportunity to do those things very much."

These are some of Reagan's positions on key issues:

•ECONOMY — Reagan blames the federal government for the double-digit inflation that currently plagues the nation. His anti-inflation effort would include a slowdown in federal spending (except for defense appropriations) as well as reduction in taxes by 33 percent over a three-year period.

This, he says, will "restore the incentive to produce — increasing jobs and the supply of goods and services."

•EDUCATION — According to the 1980 Republican Platform, the party supports deregulation by the federal government of public education, and encourages the elimination of the Department of Education. The party holds the federal government bureaucracy accountable for its "harassment of colleges and universities" that has "unconscionably driven up their expenses and tuition."

•FOREIGN POLICY — The U.S., according to Reagan, must project a stronger presence in the world by a national strategy of "peace through strength." To do that, he would increase defense spending, beef up intelligence and reject the SALT II treaty.

•ENERGY — Reagan favors immediate decontrol of oil, gasoline and natural gas prices. He sees this method as a way to increase domestic oil production — a prospect that he believes provides "the greatest hope for our energy future over the next several years." Reagan rejects any proposal for punitive gasoline taxes.

•NUCLEAR POWER — The party believes coal, gas and nuclear fission offer the best intermediate solutions to America's energy needs.

•ERA — Reagan opposes the Equal Rights Amendment. He says, however, that he supports equal rights and equal opportunities for women, without taking away traditional rights of women, such as exemption from the military draft.

•ABORTION — The Republican candidate is personally opposed to abortion and to federal funding for it in most cases. He favors federal legislation or a constitutional amendment to outlaw abortion.

•HEALTH — According to the

1980 Republican Platform, the party opposes socialized medicine in any form and rejects all proposals for national health insurance. The Republican prescription for good health care is "deregulation and emphasis upon consumer rights and patient choice."

Anderson: a candidate with ideas

He's been called a "spoiler," a "trendy politician," and a "conservative."

"I don't care whether you call me a conservative or a liberal, so long as you give me credit for having ideas," said Independent presidential candidate John B. Anderson, shortly after declaring his 1980 candidacy.

Anderson, 58, has many ideas about how to shape new public philosophy and create a "new common purpose to recover confidence in ourselves and in our institutions."

With about one week left before the election, public opinion polls show that Anderson has been getting between 10 and 15 percent of national voter support. In Michigan, with polls showing that almost a third of the voters are undecided, Anderson is a distant third to Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan, who are running neck and neck.

BORN IN ILLINOIS, Anderson grew up in the predominantly Swedish-American section of Rockford, Illinois. He attended the University of Illinois and graduated in 1942 with a bachelor's degree in political science. He received his law degree in 1946, after serving two and a half years in the army. Anderson entered the foreign service in 1952 and remained in Germany for three years. He returned in 1955 and set up a private law practice in his hometown.

In 1960, he decided to run for Congress in his district. Anderson served in the House of Representatives for 19 years until he resigned last June, to begin his presidential campaign. He and his wife of 27 years, Keke, have five children.

According to the independent candidate, he is a progressive, a moderate, and a conservative — on certain issues.

On the progressive stance, Anderson believes government needs retooling within its basic framework. He also believes, on the moderate side, that industry, labor and government should work together toward American ideals. Conservatively, he advocates effective constraints in the growth of economic spending.

The following is a summary of some of Anderson's views on key issues:

•ECONOMY — Anderson believes that labor and management should become partners, not adversaries, of government. Government spending is the major key to tackling inflation, says Anderson, who supports "fiscal austerity" and opposes wage and price controls. Increases in saving and investment will boost productivity and help to lower unemployment, according to Anderson.

"We must stop inflation, for if inflation persists, it will not represent a failing of the American people, but rather a failing of their political leadership," he recently said.

•EDUCATION — A long-time proponent of a separate Department of Education, Anderson has supported increased federal appropriations for the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant program. He emphasizes, "If America is to surmount the technological challenges of its time, it needs educated innovators."

Anderson believes that the dual system of public and private educational systems maximizes the choice for students and their parents, and he has fought federal intervention in private education.

•50-50 PLAN — The Anderson 50-50 plan is a proposal to raise the federal tax on gasoline by 50 cents, coupled with a 50 percent reduction in the Social Security taxes paid by employees. According to Anderson, the "motor fuels conservation tax" is necessary to reduce U.S. dependence on foreign oil. As he said in a recent speech to the National Press Club, "Either we tax ourselves in the form of higher prices for our petroleum products, or we allow OPEC to tax us in the form of ever higher and higher prices for crude oil."

The tax would apply to all highway motor fuels, including gasoline and diesel fuel. According to the proposal, all proceeds from the motor fuels tax would go directly into the Social Security trust funds to increase benefits and bolster the system.

•DEFENSE — "I believe in a strong defense posture — but an intelligent one," says Anderson, who opposes the MX missile system and supports the volunteer army. Anderson believes that spending billions for defense while neglecting other areas of the Congress passes guidelines for campaigns, elections

By Jeanne Helfrick
Staff Writer

Passage of the revised Elections Commissions guidelines, which had been pending for the past two weeks, finally took place at Congress' Wednesday evening meeting.

Questions about a student referendum passed in 1978 which set specific dates for elections, concern about prohibiting active campaigning in buildings on balloting days, and involvement in opposing Proposal D (the Tisch Amendment) had resulted in the revisions being tabled the last two weeks.

The student referendum mandates that elections take place on the second Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in November. The original proceedings scheduled the elections for the third Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in November so they had to be revised to comply with the referendum.

THE REVISIONS prohibit campaigning on election days in buildings where balloting takes place. At previous meetings some Congress members expressed concern that this regulation would harm the effectiveness of the campaigning process.

"It would probably be a better learning experience to open the buildings for campaigning before the election," said Elections Commissioner Larry Tomlinson. However, he said allowing that type of campaigning during balloting interferes with the flow of traffic in buildings.

TOMLINSON SAID he had contacted Cindy Hill of the Student Life Office to obtain a waiver of the university distribution policy for the election. The policy prohibits campaigning in any building or outside any building on campus.

The revisions also mandate an open meeting when Congress votes to remove a member of the executive staff. Previously the vote was held in a closed session.

John Anderson — the only positive choice

His was a long-shot candidacy from the beginning. He was virtually unknown outside his home state, espoused a moderate ideology that rankled right-wing party regulars, and had the audacity to break with partisan ranks and vote his conscience.

And yet, by the early Iowa caucuses, now independent presidential candidate John B. Anderson had begun to distinguish himself from the pack of Republicans running for their party's nomination for president. He was a forceful, articulate candidate, who rarely compromised his position on issues in favor of what appealed to most voters. Throughout the ten months of the presidential campaign, Anderson has shown an integrity, honesty, and intellectual strength far above that of the major party candidates.

On Nov. 4, we believe voters should cast their ballot for John Anderson.

CONVENTIONAL WISDOM said that a dark-horse maverick such as Anderson couldn't win the GOP nomination. The Republican candidates waged, from the very beginning of the campaign, an ultra-conservative battle with its roots in less government intervention, increased defense spending, a balanced budget, massive tax cuts, prayer in schools and anti-abortion.

Anderson, to put it mildly, was anathema to party leaders, who, this July wrote a rightist platform and nominated a candidate whose conservative zeal can be matched only by that of Arizona Senator Barry Goldwater in the 1964 presidential race.

HE PRESENTED himself as a moderate choice for the voters amidst the extremist rhetoric of the major party candidates. And in this, he has been consistent. He is fiscally conservative, yet, liberal on social issues. He supports the passage of the Equal Rights Amendment and although personally against it, he supports freedom of choice on the controversial issue of abortion. As he is fond of telling audiences around the country, "I wear my heart on the left, but my wallet on the right."

Conventional wisdom says Anderson can't win. And perhaps convention will triumph. Recent polls indicate that Anderson is losing considerable support as the election draws near, after having peaked in national ratings over the summer. But the polls also show another significant factor: an undecided vote of 25 percent. That vote could make the difference for Anderson's national unity campaign.

Perhaps the most decisive factor in this year's presidential race will be voter attitude. In the course of this year's campaign season, candidates on both sides have resorted to mud-slinging tactics, personal slurs and attacks on one another's character while debate and discussion on the issues which will affect us the most in the next four years has largely been ignored. In view of the circus-like atmosphere surrounding the presidential race, it is not surprising to find that many voters are simply turning off and tuning out. Many probably will stay home on Nov. 4.

However, we urge voters of all ages — but especially students — to vote. Apathy will merely get the wrong man elected to the White House — a man who will decide the direction this country will take for the next four years, who will decide whether the nation will go to war or resolve its conflicts peaceably, and whether the quality of life will improve or deteriorate, as it has under the current economic circumstances.

WE HAVE SEEN what the Carter record has achieved. The prospect of a Reagan presidency is frightening. Anderson is our only choice. More than any other candidate, he has the qualities necessary for a strong and effective President.

Less than a year ago, Gerald Ford said of Anderson, "(He is) one of the most able people I know. John is very articulate. He's attractive and he's a little more middle-of-the-road or liberal than other candidates. John could surprise some people."

That says it all.

Intramural schedule annoys student

Dear Editor:

I would appreciate the chance to use your Editorial column to air a grievance I have with the way the men's intramural football schedule was arranged.

The first two teams in each of the three divisions were to go on to the playoffs. In case of a tie, the team that had given up the least points would go on. The six teams that qualified for the playoffs included Apogee, The Commuter Cats, The Crusaders, Jaws, Penthouse, and the team from Pryale House.

With six teams in the playoffs it is obvious that in the first round four teams will play and two teams will receive a bye. Out of the six teams it would have been safe to assume that Jaws was number one since they gave up only 11 points. The Crusaders were number two by giving up 13 points and the four teams were somewhere behind. Why then did the second place Crusaders have to play an extra game to reach the semi-finals and a team with less creditable statistics (The Commuter Cats) receive a bye? This is the first of two questions that I would like to see answered by either or both Mr. Valliere or Mr. Van Fleet.

THE SECOND question refers to the way the remaining four teams (Jaws, The Crusaders, Penthouse, and The Commuter Cats) were matched up in the semi-finals. Tournaments I have been familiar with range from fifth grade softball to the Wimbledon tennis tournament and all of these tournaments are played according to seeds. I would assume that both our Athletic Director and our Intramural Coordinator are aware of this very basic and traditional method of running a tournament. Why then did the number one team play the number two team and the number three team play the number four team?

It seems to me that The Crusaders were done injustice when they were required to play an extra playoff game and then again when they, being the obvious second place team, were matched up against the number one team in the semi-finals.

I would appreciate it if the aforementioned members of our Athletic Department would reply to my questions via this column. In closing, I wonder, if this is how the Athletic Department handles such a simple issue, how will it perform under much more serious conditions? No wonder we are losing our sports programs.

Rally participators thanked

Dear Editor:

On behalf of the Beer Lake Yacht Club, I would like to take this opportunity to express my thanks to all who took part in the "Pro-America" March last October 10. And, special thanks to Anthropology Professor Richard Stamps, whose interest helped to inspire an entire lecture hall class to stand with hands over hearts, and sing the National Anthem.

We were disappointed to see hundreds of students ignore our rally to support the American cause of freedom, but deeply gratified when a dedicated few did participate.

WE BELIEVE the apathetic attitude shown towards the March was personified by a student's statement to the press which read in part, "...we are well aware of the hostages predicament, but are tired of complaining..." The Yacht Club believes that our greatest strength as a nation is found in our young people. We, young Americans would do well to remember that "fortress America" cannot remain as such without the support of her people.

It is the opinion of the Beer Lake Yacht Club directors that the March was an outstanding success. Again, our thanks to all who contributed to that success.

Idiot insulting

Dear Editor:

We have had enough. Send the "Village Idiot" back to whatever institution he came from and develop a little journalistic professionalism.

The Sail is quite acceptable until the page bearing his column appears. We are horrified to think that someone from off-campus might happen to pick up a paper and take that garbage as an example of OU student mentality.

ALTHOUGH these sentiments have been building for some time, the latest column has demanded an active response.

There is nothing whatsoever humorous in professors being shot. Just ask the students attending class the day the Ferris economics professor was gunned down last year.

Whether the columns are offensive like this one or merely absurd like the majority, one thing is clear. They are utterly devoid of value. Please stop insulting our intelligence.

Cable corrected

Dear Editor:

The report of the cable television discussion at the Senate meeting last week was misleading. In fact, a major recommendation of the ad hoc committee was to request key groups at Oakland University to investigate specific issues surrounding the use of instructional television via cable.

We believe that the "urgency" associated with this rapidly evolving technology requires that immediate initiation of debate and discussion throughout the university. It would be unfortunate if readers assumed that the complex issue of cable had been resolved.

Our goal was to alert the university community to the technology and to ask that consideration of this media be given highest priority. The issue of instructional television is far too serious to be acted upon without thorough analysis and discussion.

Pre-osteopathic society formed

By Joe Deckenbach
Staff Writer

If a person in Michigan goes to a doctor for a physical, chances are nearly 50-50 that they won't see an MD. Almost half of the family medicine practiced in this state is done by osteopaths, or DO's.

A pre-osteopathic society has been started at OU this semester. It is the first in Michigan, and one of only a handful in the country.

An osteopathic doctor is as much a doctor as an MD. He is licensed to practice in every state in the union, and works side by side with MD's in many hospitals. The primary difference today, according to Dr. Maria Paluzny of the University of Michigan Medical School, is that most MD's specialize in obstetrics, internal medicine, ophthalmology, or any number of other areas, while most DO's go into family practice.

According to Dr. Dennis Deacon of Pontiac Osteopathic Hospital (POH), "osteopaths are more people-oriented" than treatment-oriented, and they use the holistic approach to health care.

HOLISTIC MEDICINE is based on the idea that there are many underlying factors to a sickness or disease that pervades the whole person.

While an MD will treat the symptoms, osteopaths seek to find the cause and treat that in addition to taking care of the actual symptoms.

The idea for the new society came from two OU students, Dave Calkin and Steve Barnett, and Deacon, all employees of POH.

According to Calkin the purpose of the society is to "clear up the ignorance and stigmas related to osteopathy, not just among the members, but also the university community." He said the society's purpose also is to impart an understanding of the osteopathic philosophy, give information regarding osteopathic schools, and provide valuable practical experience in the medical field.

Calkin, the president of the society, said there is a real need for the group because there are a significant number of students planning to apply to osteopathic medical schools, and it is important to be involved with osteopathy before applying.

THE SOCIETY plans to sponsor a Basic Cardiac Life Support Certification course for any interested students. The eight week course will be open to 30 persons and repeated each semester.

In addition, a program has been worked out for students to work at POH, and get experience in the emergency room, and other areas of the hospital.

economy will not make the country strong in the long run.

"Rather it will weaken us, and make us more vulnerable to the whims and fancies of foreign nations," he says. "We must begin to use our heads again."

•FOREIGN POLICY — Foreign policy begins at home, according to Anderson, with a healthy economy, a strengthened dollar and a reduced dependency on foreign oil. Anderson supported the grain embargo, the Olympic boycott and the shut-off of scientific and technological information to the Soviet Union.

•NUCLEAR POWER — Calling for a total restructuring of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, Anderson feels that no new nuclear plants should be licensed unless the nuclear waste problem is solved.

•HEALTH — Anderson is opposed to a national health insurance plan. In his view, any such plan would "exacerbate the cost problem" and result in the "decline of the overall quality of health services." He believes any health program must involve the private sector, the government and the public.

•ERA — A supporter of the passage of the Equal Rights Amendment, Anderson feels it is needed to "enshrine in the Constitution the moral value judgment that sex discrimination is wrong."

•ABORTION — The independent candidate strongly believes the decision of abortion is a matter to be decided by a woman in conjunction with her God and her physician. He adds, "The state simply should not be allowed to interfere with this intimate choice."

Anderson's vice-presidential running-mate is Patrick Lucey, former governor of Wisconsin.

New LP proves 'The Boss' is best

If you're into marriage, cars, romanticism and gravel pit voices (not to mention rock-n-roll), you'll love The River, the new album by Bruce Springsteen.

There's no doubt that Springsteen's good. Fraternity rock seems to be one of the IN THINGS for "The Boss" to put on vinyl these days. (You 'older' folks remember that 'good old music,' right? YOU know, the kind of stuff that made you stand up and jump up and down to the music for no particular reason?)

Well if you're a non-believer — or too young to remember — just listen to Sherry Darling, Hungry Heart, Out in The Street, Ramrod, I Got a Crush on You, or I'm a Rocker for proof. They all possess a driving beat reminiscent of the 60's dancin-in-the-street days that make you want to lose a few inhibitions and shake the old bones for a while.

SPRINGSTEEN doesn't shock anyone with instrumental solos on this album. You almost have to search for them. And when you've just about lost all hope of hearing one, a sax solo pops up in Sherry Darling, followed by a guitar solo immediately afterwards. They're not Ted Nugent screamers and they're not going to break your ear drums, but they will enchant you nonetheless.

Springsteen is still an adept story teller, and he draws you into fantasy worlds through his songs. He gives you a chance to believe you're Joe Cool for a while instead of Joe Shmoe.

Ballads are a standard trait of Springsteen's albums, and he delivers the goods on The River. The title song is a heart-wrenching story about young love forced into adult surroundings (along with the whole array of 'innocence lost,' etc.) caused by an unwanted pregnancy.

Springsteen takes the permanence of marriage and facing up to responsibilities a step further with I Wanna Marry You. He allows the character to make his own decision rather than forcing him into one. The romanticist in Springsteen comes out in this song, with a man who wants to settle down with a girl he sees walking by him every day with two children she's raising on her own.

THE MOST EFFECTIVE ballad on the album is Point Blank. Musically, it has an eerie quality about it. The guitar part has an acceptional ghost-like, haunting feeling. The lyrics are somewhat repetitive but the lines change between Springsteen uttering, 'point blank.' The song comes to an inevitably fatal climax, with everything leveling off to the obvious in the end, bang-bang baby you're dead.

With the array of interesting songs on this double album, you've got two hours worth of good music to listen to. The local rock stations are giving Springsteen a lot of air time, so if you have to wait for the album to come down in price-range, do so. But by all means, buy the album. It's worth the price you have to pay.

Times Square takes a big dive

Times Square is supposedly the movie that everyone is talking about — little do the advertisers know, but all I'm hearing is bad things.

The "youth" (term used loosely) of America are the target of this film, hoping to grab their money and make stars out of a couple of people the aforementioned "youth" can relate to.

The public was promised a deep, understanding, probing film, alleged to explain the new wave, but instead it exploits it.

The Robert Stigwood Organization, which made a mockery out of Tommy, and is being sued by the Bee Gees for $75 million, has given us the usual, diluted unbelievable view of life, that haunted Grease.

AS USUAL with a Stigwood formula film, the story starts out quite nicely. Nice scenes, nice people, good costumes, decent acting. Figuring that believability bores people, Stigwood starts planting seeds of ridiculousness.

The plot revolves around two young girls from different backgrounds. Nicky Marotta, a juvenile court regular, who has no discernible family or household, and Pamela Pearl, daughter of a politician on his way up.

Though separate incidents of acting like very bad little girls, they both end up in the same unit of a county mental health hospital. They don't like each other very much but have a grudging respect for the way each of them is handling their situation.

Nicky is released to be taken to jail, and she runs away, taking Pamela, with her. They escape in a stolen ambulance and start taking Times Square and all of New York by storm.

THE STORY GOES straight downhill from there. They are befriended by an all-night D.J. who lets them sing obscenities on the radio. It's a rip-off. The whole movie is too silly to be taken seriously.

Robin Johnson and Trini Alvarado do the best they can with the material provided but appear very amateur because of the shallowness of the plot. Hopefully this will not ruin Johnson's chances of getting a better role in future, because she shows a lot of poise for her first film.

Tim Curry might never work again, after his horribly obnoxious performance as the all-night D.J., Johnny LaGuardia.

The music is misused horribly in the most cliché of moments, reminiscent of the Stigwood version of Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band. And as if that weren't crime enough, the city of New York is misrepresented, in some of the worst photography ever.

The movie is not worth the film it is printed on, and it isn't worth your $4 either.

ALICE TOMBOULIAN: A PROVEN LEADER

In her first term as State Representative, Alice Tomboulia has become one of the most effective lawmakers in Lansing, taking on tough battles to save jobs and protect the environment.

Rep. Tomboulia was instrumental in keeping the General Motors plant — and 6,000 jobs — in the Pontiac area. She was the major force behind the Hazardous Waste Management Act, a model piece of legislation that will insure that Michigan won't have a Love Canal tragedy in the future.

Two years of hard work are proof of Alice Tomboulia's leadership. On November 4, vote for a leader.

Colleges should try three-pointer

By Mark Marentette
Staff Writer

When the NBA adopted the three point goal (the idea of giving an additional point for a shot beyond a designated area on the court originated in the old ABA), it brought back an exciting dimension to professional basketball.

The shot's main effect has been on games where the score is close and time is running out. A team down by three points or more is no longer limited to penetrating the lane hoping to score and draw a foul as well. Because of this, the three point line necessitates a different approach to defensive play during those final moments.

FACED WITH THE possibility of the opposition scoring three points from the outside, a team must cover a potential shooter further out while still protecting the key and baseline. This usually requires a man on man defense which can complete the task without fouling in such a critical situation. (Man on man coverage is generally more prone to picking up fouls than other methods of defense.) With the three point option, there is just as much pressure on both teams even though one is ahead.

As far as the spectator is concerned, the three-pointer is a guaranteed crowd pleaser.

A jump shot from outside the 20-foot line that falls through the net can be as awe-inspiring as a good dunk. Whereas the popularity of the jam is based on its display of power (the more devastating the better), the long jumper requires a fine skill demanding a combination of strength and precision.

AFTER SEEING WHAT the three point field goal has accomplished in the NBA, why not introduce it to collegiate competition?

Besides having the same effect on the style of last-minute play as it did in the professional ranks, the three-pointer would have more of an impact on a season as a whole at the collegiate level because of the shorter schedules.

In the NBA, a team can gamble on a long outside shot and lose without damaging its chances of post-season hopes due to the large number of games it often has to make up for a loss. College squads, on the other hand, have a lot more at stake during the entire course of their schedule owing to the fact that only one or two losses can mean the difference between NCAA and NIT tournaments or nothing.

The same notion holds true during playoffs and championships. In the pros, a title is based on series play, while in college tournaments the rule is one loss and you're gone. With this in mind, an accurate long distance shooter would be an awesome weapon for a college coach to possess if the three-pointer was in existence.

The allowance of the 20-foot line in the NBA has changed the entire complexion of the game, especially late in the fourth quarter. I would like to see that change in the collegiate ranks.

KEY INTERCEPTION: Jeff Starks makes an interception to halt a Penthouse drive near the end of the first half of the IM football championship game, which Jaws won 30-0.

Third straight

Jaws wins IM football title

Jaws claimed its third consecutive IM football title last Tuesday with a 30-0 whitewashing of Penthouse before an enthusiastic crowd of more than 200 people. Jaws, which also won its second straight softball title this fall, has appeared in the football championship game for five straight years.

Several key errors by the Penthouse offense gave Jaws an early lead and the momentum which eventually carried them to the victory.

The Penthouse effort was hampered by the absence of starting quarterback Bill Cunningham, who was unable to play due to a death in the family.

On Penthouse's first play from scrimmage, quarterback Don Stieler threw an interception to Jaws' Tim Smiley. The drive that followed resulted in a missed field goal, but Jaws got the ball back again when Mark Feters picked off an errant Stieler pass, again on the first play from scrimmage. Jaws took advantage of the turnover this time with Tom Race catching a 25-yard pass from Ric Brauker for the touchdown. Tim Kieft kicked the extra point to make it 7-0.

On its third attempt to move the ball, after Stieler (who completed two passes in two attempts — both to the opposition) had been replaced, Penthouse was forced to punt. Jaws scored quickly on a pass from Brauker to Dale Bambrick with Kieft kicking successfully once more for a 14-0 lead.

Jaws finished its first half scoring on a 40-yard field goal by Kieft, and a last-minute drive by Penthouse was halted by a Jeff Starks interception.

After punting on its first possession in the third quarter,

Jaws stopped Penthouse with yet another interception. Minutes later, Brauker hit Race to make the score 23-0, as the extra point attempt failed.

Although still unable to hit paydirt itself, Penthouse kept Jaws out of the end zone until there were just four minutes remaining on the clock. Malcom Piele was on the receiving end of Brauker's final touchdown toss of the game, and Kieft's kick concluded the scoring.

Pryale takes softball crown

The Pryale Cocktails edged PUD 5-3 to claim the intramural co-ed softball championship Friday.

The score was tied 2-2 after the first inning, but Pryale went in front in the third by scoring three runs.

Netters second in conference

After one day of competition in the GLIAC meet at Northwood Institute, OU's women's tennis team was in second place with nine points, well behind Grand Valley State's 13.

Wayne State and Hillsdale were tied for third with eight, Ferris State had seven, Michigan Tech three and Northwood and Lake Superior State one each.

In singles competition, Barb Wroblewski at number three, Kelli Jordan at number five and Jody Woloszynski at number six won both of their matches to advance into further competition.

IN DOUBLES, the team of Wroblewski and Nancy Golding at number three also won twice.

In other action, Golding lost her first match of the day at number one singles. Karen Wiecha won one and lost one at number two and Karen White lost at number four.

In doubles, Wiecha and White were ousted at number one and Jordan and Woloszynski at number two.

Oskey leads booters to easy win

Sophomore Dandy Oskey scored his first goal of the season and had two assists to lead the OU soccer team to a 4-0 win over Grace College Saturday.

Mark Christensen picked up Oakland's first tally of the afternoon, taking one of Oskey's assists and driving it past the Grace goal keeper at the 9:25 mark of the first half. The goal was Christensen's seventh of the year.

Freshman Morris Lupenec

scored on an assist from Tony Hermiz at 22:15, raising his total to a team-leading 16.

Oakland finished its first half scoring with Dan Fitzgerald tallying on Oskey's second assist with 17:45 left in the period.

OU HAD 12 shots on goal in the first half while holding Grace to just one.

Oskey put the ball in the net at 5:25 of the second half after taking a solid shot that was stopped by the Grace keeper minutes earlier. Although able to keep the ball in the opposition's territory for the remainder of the game, Oakland was unable to score again.

The victory raised the Pioneers' record to 11-4-2 with three games remaining.

OU travels to Central Michigan on Wednesday and plays its final home game against Ferris State on Nov. 1.

Wroblewski sparks net squad

Although she is only a junior, Barb Wroblewski has firmly established herself as one of the brightest stars of the OU women's tennis team.

The Melvindale High School graduate has compiled an impressive 15-1 record in regular season action this year, and finished first in the GLIAC tournament Saturday at number three singles.

That's not unusual considering that prior to attending OU she had lost a total of only two matches at Henry Ford Community College, both of which came in the semi-finals of state championship play.

What is unusual, however, is her lack of varsity experience. "They didn't have a tennis team at my high school," she said, "so I played baseball and basketball."

Wroblewski's natural athletic ability obviously has contributed to her overall game but she is quick to praise the excellent coaching she has received.

"Coach (Brad) Newman has helped me a great deal because he never gives up on you," she said. "He gives me a lot of confidence, he knows the game and he's a good coach."

Wroblewski's style on the court is always calm. "I try to remain under control most of the time," she said. "I try to conduct myself as a lady representing Oakland University."

Newman, now in his second year as tennis coach, describes her as a very high-caliber player with the ability to volley very well.

"Barb is very competitive and will be even better next year," he said.

DIVING SAVE: Freshman Sandy Thompson dives to return a shot in the volleyball team's match with Calvin College Thursday.

Runners first in cross invite

The cross country squad won the Sienna Heights Invitational Saturday with a team score of 65 points. Grand Valley State took second in the meet, followed by Rose Hulman Institute of Indiana. The title was the Pioneers' first in invitational competition this fall.

Steve Swarts led the OU effort with a fourth place finish in a time of 26:33. He was followed by Kevin Hanson who placed fifth in 26:39, Mark Carter, fifteenth in 27:21, David Schepke, eighteenth in 27:28 and John Horwarth, twenty-third in 27:48.

Oakland ends the 1980 cross country season this Saturday at the NCAA Division II Regional being held at Wisconsin-Parkside.

Dancer offers advice on ballet techniques

The Oakland Sail/ Ted Villella

The Oakland Sail/ Bob Knoska

OU dance students and the general public were treated to a lecture-demonstration last Sunday on the art of ballet by noted dancer and choreographer Edward Villella, left.

The artist, who began dancing when he was ten, explained various techniques of ballet and the importance of dance as an art form.

Villella, 44, began training at the American School of Ballet, studying for a year at the New York High School of Performing Arts. At 15, he stopped dancing for four years, returning to the art and joining the New York City Ballet in 1957.

His choreography for various television programs has won him numerous awards, but critics maintain that his greatest achievement to date is his title performance in "The Prodigal Son" in 1960.
