A Note from Linda Pavonetti - A New Display for the Holidays

Thanksgiving is finished—and so, hopefully, is the turkey! But before you submit grades, attend commencement, and say good-bye to your office for a few days of “R & R,” think about the upcoming holidays: Hanukkah, Christmas, and Kwanzaa.

Gifts are a part of each of these holidays and there are no better gifts than books. In this season of light, peace, and harmony, we would like to suggest that you take a few minutes to visit the exhibit of holiday books on the third floor of Pawley Hall. The display targets the three December holidays and most will appeal to children. However, the Robert Sabuda holiday pop-up books have become a tradition in our family. Sabuda, a Michigan native, has created Hanukkah, Kwanzaa, Christmas—and everyone’s favorite—cookies pop-ups. Sister-in-law Diane receives a new Sabuda book every year—and she displays them as part of her holiday decorations. Now they are on display for you.

We have included a few books for adults, one being Ashley Bryan’s Christmas Gift: An Anthology of Christmas Poems, Songs, and Stories—with several of Ashley’s illustrations also on display. John Green—every teen’s dream author—has a holiday book too, Let It Snow: Three Holiday Romances. There are board books for baby, and lovely classics for everyone—from Dr. Seuss’s Grinch to the Littlest Angel and Dickens’ Christmas Carol.

Books are one-size-fits-all. What can be cozier than curling up by the fire with a good book?

A Note from Leigh Dzwik

In this week’s President’s Report to Campus, President Hynd reminded the community that Oakland University’s mission is to advance knowledge and art in a diverse and inclusive environment.

To that end, I wish to remind those colleagues that work and learn alongside us in Pawley Hall that we strive to provide an accessible, inclusive environment for all. We have many facilities projects underway to work toward that goal. If you have ideas that support this as well, please do not hesitate to send your ideas my way.
