

STAFF BULLETIN

February 15, 1971--Infinity

Formerly published weekly--but now no more--by university news service, 122 North Foundation. The deadline is here.

AS THE STAFF BULLETIN SINKS SLOWLY IN THE WEST. . .

The administrative ax fell so quickly on this publication that the editor feels obliged to publish this SPECIAL, COMMEMORATIVE, FINAL, AND FAREWELL issue to thank its many supporters and detractors. Special homage is paid to:

--Paul Tipler (physics), who wrote us our very first nasty note--on the afternoon of the first issue.

--The professors of Kresge Library, exactly half of whom poured boiling water on the editor while the other half dried him off.

--The bookcenter folks, who were about our most helpful news source.

--The late, lamented Troy Crowder (well, lamented anyway, although not as late as Tom Dutton always was), who like a good NHL defenseman stopped many a shot from the blue line.

--Charlie Brown, who chuckled (before publication, by the way) at a farewell article and cartoon that bordered on the far side of libel.

--A secretary of the Institute of Biological Sciences, who so liked one article that she sent a copy to Mrs. Rosenthal in New York City and another to Bob Hope in Hollywood.

--Alan Scott and his Oakland Center crew, who were big enough to pardon real transgressions.

--The business office people, whose friendliness and helpfulness make you wonder how they can be so mean about such stupid business forms.

--Two chancellors and a president (some overlap there), whose policy toward the STAFF BULLETIN apparently was to grin and bear it--or at least to bear it.

--And to the few on campus who, on at least one occasion during the past three years, may not have found something in the STAFF BULLETIN that offended or upset them, the editor extends his sincere apology.
