Student-Faculty Team Analyzes Veterans

Disabled veterans of four American wars have different perceptions about their roles as veterans, different attitudes toward the military and toward their own roles in society, a team of OU faculty-student researchers report.

Their findings are offered in "Four Wars, 53 Life Histories: Therapy Implications," a paper just submitted to the American Psychiatric Assoc. The report documents research conducted during the spring and summer terms of 1972 at the Veterans Administration Center Hospital in Hampton, Va.

The students and faculty are from Allport College of Behavioral Science.

Human Development School Will Reach People

OU has developed a proposal for a major new academic unit at the institution, a School of Community and Human Development.

The School will offer a four-year program leading to a B.S. degree in a variety of community service occupations. These include the emerging fields of manpower development and neighborhood redevelopment.

William Moorhouse, asst. provost for planning, said the new School will be presented for approval at the University Senate's Nov. 21 meeting. The Senate and the Board of Trustees approved the School in concept last spring, but the speci-

Reddy Investigates Possible Link Between Cataracts-Nutrition Deficiency

Researchers of two nations will collaborate in an investigation of the possible relationship between nutritional deficiency and cataract formation in human subjects.

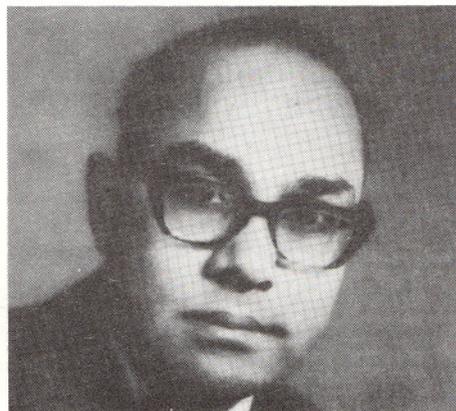

Dr. Venkat N. Reddy, asst. director of OU's Institute of Biological Sciences, will coordinate and direct the project involving scientists of the United States and India.

Cataracts (clouding of the lens of the eye obstructing the passage of light) is the leading cause of blindness in this country. It has afflicted 16 per cent of the 400,000 persons declared legally blind, Dr. Reddy said.

He explained that cataracts in Western countries may be found in persons of varying ages, but that they are generally associated with old age. The disease is even more threatening in many non-Western lands where it strikes more persons, including those under 30.

The research program will begin next year in India, a nation with an unusually large number of cataract victims in the younger age groups, and a nation with a known poor nutritional status for many of its citizens, Dr. Reddy said.

Although the deficiency of certain amino acids and vitamins has been implicated in cataract development in experimental animals, it is not known if such deficiencies are the cause of cataracts in humans. Up to now there has been no systematic study to explore this possibility, the OU researcher reported.

Participating with Dr. Reddy in the research project will be Dr. G. Winston Barber, Wills Eye Hospital and Research Institute, Philadelphia, Pa.; Dr. Jin H. Kinoshita, National Eye Institute, Bethesda, Md.; and Dr. P. Siva Reddy, Sarojini Devi Eye Hospital and Institute of Ophthalmology, Hyderabad, India. (The Drs. Reddy are not related).

The Sarojini Devi Eye-Hospital was chosen for the research site because of the availability of the large number of patients with cataracts.

fic proposal will now be submitted to both bodies for review. State Board of Education approval will be sought as well. A tentative opening is set for the fall of 1973.

The School would become the sixth college or school within the University. The college and schools are semi-autonomous units within Oakland and have the right to offer their own major programs.

Undergraduates with professional training in community and social service fields are in increasing demand, Moorhouse said. "Education for central positions in applied social science careers is now lacking." There are the para-professionals and the graduate-degree-holding top administrators, but no professionals in the middle ranks, Moorhouse explained.

On a local level, the Oakland County Commission on Economic Opportunity has identified several problem areas in which graduates of the proposed School of Community and Human Development would be qualified to find solutions. These are in human support services, developing community action leaders and groups, manpower development (job training opportunities and utilization of para-professionals), senior citizen

Travel Display Livens Library

The October exhibit in the Kresge Library covers the topic of travel and is sponsored by the Office of Student Organizations. The display communicates to viewers the new wide range of services provided by the Travel Office. Travel enthusiasts at Oakland will find an exciting array of pictures, posters and fliers covering countries throughout the world in the display. Further information is available at 48 O.C.

needs, child care needs and urban design problems.

Among the School's proposed majors would be: human interaction (to serve as a preparation in one-to-one and group procedure necessary for work with people in many areas), child care and development, community mental health, manpower services and development, community law and justice program, and neighborhood redevelopment (a program involving the use of lay persons as well as professionals to help revitalize communities).

The first two years of study would include a core curriculum combining the acquisition of knowledge with skills and experience applicable to work-service situations. In selecting major and minor fields of study, the student can combine offerings within the School with those of the other schools and colleges. An optional senior-year field experience internship will be open.

Research Committee Deadlines Near For Small Grants, Fellowship Applications

In an effort to deal as equitably as possible with a growing number of applications for support, the University Research Committee has established closing dates for the receipt of small grant proposals and research fellowship applications. Those seeking small grant support for the current academic year and those wishing research fellowship support encompassing the spring and summer of 1973 are requested to file completed applications with the Office of Research and Instructional Services before 5 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 27.

Research Fellowships

Oakland University Research Fellowships carry a $1,500 stipend plus an allowance of up to $500 for expenses related to the research. The effective tenure of awards will be from Jan. 1, 1972 to Dec. 31, 1973.

Applications in letter form describing the work to be undertaken

Ruling Delayed On OU Salary Case

In a statement released Oct. 9, Attorney General Frank Kelley declined to comment on the question of whether OU is required to disclose its salary schedules. A similar case, currently under litigation, concerning Saginaw Valley College prohibits a ruling at this time.

President O'Dowd said that he would relate the information to the Board of Trustees and let them take it into consideration.

'Sphere' Features ADA Graduate

In the October issue of the new Betty Crocker magazine Sphere, Academy of Dramatic Art graduate Robert Denison and his wife, Susan, describe the African art of cooking.

A recent performer at Atlanta's Alliance Theatre, Denison and his wife learned about African cooking when they served in the Peace Corps in Africa's Gold Coast.

Denison who graduated from the Academy in 1970, is now playing in the off-Broadway production of "The Contrast."

will be received until 5 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 27, 1972, in the Office of Research and Instructional Services. The narrative portion need be no more than three pages in length; a vita and a budget summary outlining expected uses of the associated $500 allowance should be appended to the letter.

Review of proposals will be carried out by the Research Committee with such external assistance as may be deemed appropriate.

Research Grants

Research proposals will be accepted from members of the Oakland University faculty and staff twice each year, with decisions normally available within one month after the closing date. Applicants seeking support for the current academic year should apply as indicated above before 5 p.m. on Oct. 27, 1972.

In order to provide support to a maximum number of scholarly projects, the Research Committee limits individual research grants to $500 for periods of twelve months or less.

Particular attention will be given to the initiation and the early development of new avenues of research.

Support requested may include supplies, equipment, undergraduate student assistance, technical services of various kinds, including time on the University IBM 360/40, secretarial help and domestic travel support.

Pioneers Battle Kalamazoo To Deadlock in Overtime Play

The OU Pioneers and Kalamazoo College played to a 0-0 tie in their soccer match Oct. 7 at Kalamazoo. After regulation play ended in a scoreless deadlock, the teams failed to do better in the two overtime periods of five minutes each. Although Oakland put on a full press that kept the ball in their opponent's end throughout the overtime periods, they could not put the ball into the net.

For the game, Oakland edged Kalamazoo in shots-on-goal 12 - 8 and had an 8 - 4 advantage in corner kicks. The Pioneers continued to exhibit good team play, but they have yet to come up with a big scorer. They had several good scoring chances during the game but failed to get the ball past Kalamazoo goalie, Craig Unger. John Motzer, OU's coach, said that Unger was probably the best goalie he has seen this year. Oakland outplayed Kalamazoo, but it was Unger's work in the net that kept the game even. Top players for Oakland were half-backs Mike Arndt of Utica and Mark Korzon who played for Andover.

The Pioneers play Central Michigan Oct. 20 (away) and Notre Dame, Oct. 28 (home).

Funding of the project is being sought from the National Institutes of Health. In addition to the technical review by peer groups at NIH, the proposal must also receive approval by the Indian Council for Medical Research. Dr. Reddy expressed optimism that funding would be available through NIH or other sources.

Oakland's Institute of Biological Sciences is known in this country and abroad for varied aspects in the field of eye research. The Institute, which is under the direction of Dr. V. Everett Kinsey, has been supported generously by grants from the National Eye Institute and during the fiscal 1971-72 year alone, the research grants awarded by NEI to the Institute amounted to nearly $300,000.

There was little unanimity found on questions presented to the four groups except in the matter of Veterans Administration Services which the veterans found to be good. They also felt these services were their due for obligations performed.

Model findings, by group are: World War I veteran - generally suspicious of the interview, but was proud of being a veteran and looked on service as a duty and a privilege. He regards the community as indifferent to his plight because he is old and shares no common interest with a "self-absorbed, materialistic society" outside.

World War II veterans: generally pleased about being interviewed and feels privileged to have served his country, but bemoans "lack of respect and relative indifference" of the community to his sacrifices. He has little desire to return to a community which he perceives as intolerant of his minor disabilities which he attributes to the war.

Korean veteran: generally much less guarded and often friendly. He questions the logic or military value of the war, but is proud of being a veteran. He feels no personal glory in his involvement, and he expresses frustration at the lack of help offered by the community.

Vietnam veteran: usually pleased to be interviewed as he seeks understanding and a chance to "ventilate anger, frustration and guilt" occasioned by participation in what he feels is an "unjust war." He often shows a sense of alienation from the military and most were cynical of the military and of the community.

Participating in the writing of the research paper with Dr. Singer were Dr. Carl Vann, chairman of Allport College who is now on leave, and Dr. Enrique Arnetta, Jr., Chief of Psychiatry and Neurology Service, Veterans Administration Hospital, Hampton, Va.

Student researchers were: James Frew, Royal Oak; Thomas Kearney, Ann Arbor; Joseph Kleinmen, Oak Park; Jed Magen, East Lansing; Debbie Merrill, Birmingham; Karen Robertson, Royal Oak; Richard Warsh, Royal Oak; and Deena Heide, Larchmont, N. Y.
