Marroitt Lauded

Prominent New York restaurant critic, Botch U. Lisam has cited Marroitt as the nation's best college food service. Lisam said the attractive food presentations and tasty desserts swayed him into choosing Marroitt. Lisam, currently hospitalized, was unavailable for comment.

Parking structure

Plans are in the making for the construction of a 170 story parking structure at OU. According to undetermined sources, the structure is not needed, but OU has been promised funds from the state.

Football Pep Rally

The OU Athletic Department announced today that a pep rally to kick off the pre-prepare football season will be held at the Pontiac Silverdome and not at the newly constructed Emily and Joseph Champagne Stadium. In the thirteen page memo, the Athletic Department predicts that the 21,500 seat Stadium will not hold the predicted 21,501 spectators.

WOUX Recognized

This month's Arbitron rating reveals that WOUX is now the most listened to station in the Metro Detroit area. "We're really delighted that listenership has grown so much, especially without an antenna. I guess there are a lot more people hanging out in the OC than I thought. I feel like I have given birth to a three-year-old baby," explained general manager Robb Kurall.

Lah-Lah-Palooza II

OU's Crockery is the sight of Lah-Lah-Palooza II next month starting in any order: R.E.O. Speedwagon, Shena Easton, Quiet Riot, Styx, The Fat Boys and The Village People. Capacity of the Crockery is 150 so advanced tickets purchases are encouraged to ensure space.

Free Books

The Bookstore is offering free text books to all students, faculty and staff of OU in retaliation to the sky rocketing tuition increases. In store coupons will be available at the door for five finger discount on all OU wearables.

Pioneer "IT" T-shirts

"I know the Pioneer IT" T-shirts are being sold by various students around campus which was inspired by the the latest dilemma of the school's mascot (See related story on sports page.). The shirts, which are sold in unisex sizes, have the "I know" phrase on the front and "I am woman, hear me belch" on the back.

Computer money distributed, put to good use in museum

By BUGSY BYTE
Default Editor

Student generated computer fees have reached an all time high of $37 million this Spring, at long last achieving the fund raising goal of Computer Acquisition Czar Micheal Angelo.

He pledged to use the money to build and furnish a History of the Computer exhibit to be built in the south wing of the K mart Library. A museum director will be hired to set-up the museum and demonstrate the computers on display.

"We'll have exhibits of every modern PC and Apple developed in the last 20 years," Angelo vowed.

He also announced plans to expand computer display opportunities to allow students in engineering, business and math to view the latest in computer technology. Right now every classroom used by these students is equipped with a computer, monitor and printer shackled to a desk and enclosed in an impermeable bullet proof case.

"This high visibility has allowed our students to really understand the importance of the computer in the world today," said Angelo.

In a related incident, three engineering students were arrested on Saturday for using an IBM and an Apple computer to complete several projects assigned earlier this term.

Public Safety officers said they would charge the students, who were all identified, with breaking and entering, malicious destruction of property and trespassing.

The computers, which were not identified, are expected to testify in the hearing set for next week.

The three may also face academic conduct charges of cheating. "Can you imagine if every student in engineering used a computer to complete homework? This kind of cheating has got to stop," said Engineering Dean Horatio Witless.

Angelo said the students' actions typify the recklessness he fears would occur if students were routinely permitted access to computers.

"The abuse would be unbearable. I mean equipment could break down, get dirty. I need these machines in mint condition for the museum. We'll be the envy of every school in the country," he predicted.

OU engineering senior Kyle Asintheicolor admires one of the first displays in the new History of the Computer exhibit in K mart Library. Repeated attempts at using the computers have forced K mart curators place computers in high security locks and cases.

Recent Residence halls rate increases have forced many money-strapped OU students to start selling all of their worldly possessions to pay for room and board. Many students, desperate for cash, sold everything they owned including the clothes off their backs. "Hey man, even though I have to go to class naked, I get to live in the dorms," said Seymore Ofmee, a senior majoring in public nudity.

DUMB bus accident mysterious

By HAR LEE DAVIDSON
Automotive writer

A Dumpy Undergraduate Mobile Bus (DUMB) flipped after it lost control trying to avoid a renegade motorcyclist on Meadow Brook Drive in front of North Foundation Hall yesterday morning.

The DUMB bus was believed to be carrying OU's new president Sandy Packer, but later reports confirmed she was not on it.

Sue Icide Wheeler, the DUMB bus driver, said, "the motorcycle just came out of nowhere, and I had to swerve to get out of the way. I remember the license plate said PREZ."

The abandoned motorcycle was later found by OU Public Safety near the OC loading docks and was registered to a John DeCzarlo.

Police located DeCzarlo this morning at his office. DeCzarlo said he did odd jobs at OU.

According to police reports,

A DUMB bus flipped out yesterday. No drugs or alcohol were found in its fuel lines.

DeCzarlo, said he could not have been involved in the incident, because he was making preparations for OU's new president all day.

"I'd be less than candid if I didn't say that the position of OU's new president is very important to me," DeCzarlo said in a telephone interview. "The university is in a critical situation right now. This is an unfortunate turn of events."

Oliver Stone was on campus checking the location for a possible movie on the conspiracy, JHD.

"The question is who stood to gain and who had the power to change the bus route," Stone said.

Geese get revenge for massacre

By MARCEY MAYHEM
Environmental Editor

Just when they thought it was safe to begin foot patrols around Beer Lake again, a daring revenge plan exploded into action against our two public safety officers.

It seems that the relatives of the slain Canadian geese blown away last March for swimming in a non-designated area, have been plotting for several months against our heros.

"We nailed them," quacked Bill Honkster, feathers rustling. "Too bad we couldn't have done more."

"Yeah," added Prisbilla Webber, witness to last year's massacre. "Those trigger-happy nuts should have been permanently disabled."

Several students were eye-witnesses to this incredible event and thought it was really cool.

As far as this reporter could decipher from excited babbling, three flocks of geese went airborne and grouped themselves into standard V-formation.

Then they attacked, diving down upon the campus heros where they let them have it.

"It was so awful," shuttered student Ira Sealot. "The first group nailed those brave officers with their webbed feet. The second group bit the backs of the officer's necks as they were doubled over."

"The next part was the funniest, right out of a cartoon," continued fellow student Willy Didsea. "Those geese swarmed down on the guys and let a ton of goose s— drop. It smelled awful."

According to the lead goose leader Honkster, the entire battalion ate a special diet that will insure that the smell hangs on our heros for a very long time.

"We waited until we saw the whites of their eyes," he quacked. "At least we didn't let that massacre go unpunished."

"We should be able to swim anywhere we want, regardless of any sign. Revenge is, ugh, well sweet indeed."

Teenage Mutant Safety Director Leonardo had no comment, as usual, but looked grim as he began passing out clothes pins.

"I don't know why they did it," sobbed Officer Dorkus. "Me and my partner were just doing what we always do, enforcing the laws."

Public safety plans to break out the big gun in its war on geese. These Robo-cops will be purchased to complete the outsourcing of law enforcement on campus and referee football games.

Plan to outsource students unveiled

By JUANA GUANA
Stiff Writer

Hinderim President John DeCzarlo confirmed this morning phase four of his allegedly innovative plan to make the university a profit making center.

Beginning in fall of 1992, students will be outsourced to other universities throughout the state.

"It's a win win idea," beamed DeCzarlo. "With the students taught off campus, we can charge extension rates, split the fees with the host university resulting in lay-offs of faculty idled by the outsourcing."

He anticipates the furloughing of approximately 260 faculty.

"We'll be able to use the money we make to fund the truly deserving faculty—those dedicated to the highest ideals of pure research," he said.

"We've placed a terrible burden on them for years, expecting research, yet not making available sufficient dollars to support their efforts. Funds that should have rightfully equipped their laboratories were used instead to pay salary costs of English and history professors. That's over now. This will transform OU into a first class research institution."

The outsourcing concept is simple. Students will register as usual before the start of a term. Then the new computer program ISIS will identify which universities throughout the state are offering similar courses at similar times.

The students will then be automatically enrolled as guest students at the host institution. Tuition dollars will be split 60-40 between with OU getting the larger percentage.

This will generate tremendous savings statewide, DeCzarlo predicted. "This allows our sister institutions to fill up all their classes to maximum enrollments and overflows, where necessary. We'll profit in these furlough fiscal times," he said.

"This place was a mess when I took over, now look at it. By the time my replacement comes on board the place will be unrecognizable."

Another advantage with the students departure is the opportunity to streamline or outright eliminate other operations that for years have catered to students, he said.

"We can simply eliminate the bookcenter now, streamline financial aid and eliminate students affairs completely," De Czarlo said. "I never thought having a separate division made sense. And parking will be marvelous year round, not just Friday afternoons."

Program treats students like adults

Congratulations are extended to Oakland University board of trustees for finally taking the decisive steps necessary to convert the residence halls into true apartment dwellings for all resident students over the age or 19.

At last students will know that there is no reason to refer to their on-campus housing as "the dorms," even though they have officially been named residence halls, because they will be living in apartments which they will lease each year.

While we realize this was a major step and of critical concern to each trustee, we know the opportunities this presents for the university and each live-in student. OU will reap financial gain and the students will earn adult status. No longer will university officials need to make yearly increases in fees for residents.

By charging what a standard apartment costs in the area and adding in food service, the continually increasing prices of maintenance and renovations will be covered. The university may discover a profit-making source and take any profits to build fully-equipped on-campus apartments for future generations of OU pioneers.

Students, who are able to move directly from high school to college, will finally have the status of adults that their cohorts who go directly from high school to the work force have. They will not have to endure four to five more years of childhood, by choosing to live in the type of residence life now offered.

They will not have to check in and out of their living areas. Guests will be permitted whenever the resident desires. What takes place behind closed doors is the business of the host and any roommates.

As with any apartment dwelling, managers will not permit excesses in any area of conduct that might interfere with other residents, but at least, residents will not have to serve on councils, attend floor meetings and parties, or participate in field trips.

Those experiences will still be available to students under the age of 19 so that they may be eased into their total independence and perhaps they will open the door for future generations to enter college and go right into apartment living.

Congratulations, trustees, for another commendable decision.

Staff missing all the important clues

I don't understand it. The Jokeland Post has let me down and I've tried so hard to leave so many clues everywhere I've been. Don't you have any investigative reporters? I've tried everything to get my name in your publication and now I guess I'm going to have to come out into the open more and be more daring.

I've made sexually harassing phone calls. I've left graphic material on windshields of cars in various university parking areas. No matter what I do, no one has taken the time to find out who I am so that I can have my name published in any of your wonderful issues.

I even became more daring — in the library, in the parking lot — a little flashing. I thought for sure I'd get my name mentioned at least once, or maybe a description of how handsome I am, but no. Someone is not very observant.

Maybe I'll leave more clues or maybe you will find a very diligent investigative reporter who will learn more about me, and then my dream to be named in your excellent newspaper will come true.

Geese get no respect, no respect at all

We've had it. We've taken enough grief and the belittling and cruel accusations hurled at us must stop. The university has a huge campus. There is room for all of us to reside together amicably. While we are not given the accommodations and conveniences that the students, faculty, staff and administration have, we do our best not too complain.

Yes, we do complain sometimes and a little loudly but you have things to complain about also.

So, treat us with a little more respect and maybe we'll go into the woods a little more often to take care of business, rather than on the sidewalks and grassy areas.

Crazed local man feels board stole his job

I'm hoping you can help me because I think I've been had in a big way. I went to one of those Bored meetings last month and much to my surprise, the Board selected a new president. I thought I was the president.

Everything was going along fine during the last year. I was doing what I always did — ride my horse, delegate and get faxes.

Image my surprise to find out that I may not have a job there any more.

I told the board that I wanted to take a position at this other huge company with an obscene salary, but I didn't think I would have to give up the job I already had.

I mean, I had plenty of extra time on my hands. And, I spent half my time in corporations anyway, so why would I have to leave the job I already had?

I'm really down on my luck now — I'm not even making $500,000 in a year. It's sad to say but you just have to have two jobs these days to survive. Now I'm down to only one. What am I going to do? Can you help me?

Lay off sweet (toothed) USC members

Who do you think you are picking on those sweet Congress members for eating candy during meetings? These kids work hard for and yet you make fun of them.

Sometimes it takes a little arm-twisting to get these dedicated student-servants to show up, but the fact is they go.

If your little reporters would pay closer attention, you'd be able to hear the meeting over the scrunching candy wrappers.

These kids have been good customers. Every week when I bring my trucks out, they are always there to help me unload. And, they always pay their bill on time (except when the budget is frozen.) Aside from the one problem, they have been good boys and girls. I think you guys are just jealous because you don't get any candy. Maybe if you offered some to your staff, you'd get some real writers.

President's dog anticipates good life

Geo, OU's new President Sandy Packer's dog, is this week's guest columnist. Geo's translation was completed by members of departments of biology and foreign language.

Life as OU's FIRST dog of the first presidential family will not be just fun, but will be terrific!

Well, I cannot really be for sure, but I heard from the cool, preppy dogs from the neighborhoods surrounding campus that my daily life should be fairly simple.

I'll wake early in the morning, probably around six, because of the non-OU traffic which will drive by my family's campus house, Sunburn Porch. They will always wake me up with their honking and racing through the campus, as if they have a job to get to in a hurry.

Well, my masters will probably get up at the same time—it's not like they will be able to sleep or anything with all the honking and car crashes from the drag racing that exists.

Next after I'll woof-down a large bowl of leftovers from the Vandenberg cafeteria. Then I'll do this dance next to the back door that looks like I'm chasing my tail, but my little bladder is so full, I'll have to twirl in circles to get my mind off of it.

Then I will be out in MY yard—oh, I'm sorry, to you it's the campus, but me it will be heaven.

It seems like an eternal garden full of fire hydrants after another, trying the catch what I am told should be the real school mascot—the geese and begging food off of any and all young, perky, gullible females I will be able to find.

I don't think people will know who I am. They'll see me as what I am; just another furry little lovable dog.

Instead I will be out for more than just that, I want to be the be the Spuds MacKenzie of OU. At least I have a chance considering the real school mascot the Pioneer man is really a woman (See related story on the Sports page.), so in the midst of all this hysteria, I see my shot at getting myself noticed.

I foresee a huge marketing scheme, considering OU's sheep-following student population is gullible enough to buy almost anything. I can see it now; my face on T-shirts, book bags, posters, sweat-shirts, shoelaces, pencils, pens, notebooks and coffee and beer mugs. I also see my name and face being used to endorse dog food, dog toys, games and puzzles and even telephones shaped in my likeness.

Well, in order to do all of this I have to make sure people see me, so I'll often chase cars, greet people as they get out of their vehicles and make a spectacle around every fire hydrant I will be able to find on campus.

I will have to protect my yard—oops—I mean the campus from those invading non-preppy mutts from the neighborhoods which surround the area. Their stench, I'm told, is all over on every pole, post and hydrant. I normally don't get made about territorial rights, but only I can be OU's next mascot.

By early afternoon, I'll probably get bored with the whole scene and I need to relax and just get away. I am told there is a really great deserted kidney shaped pool by the golf course. I'll lay in the sun on the flagstone deck and contemplate what new ways I can look quite and how more people will notice me.

By evening, as the drag racing and horn honking traffic picks up again, I will venture home holding my head up high knowing that I will be the top dog of OU.

Daily precautions spur dance craze

Poop Shuffle brings national attention to OU

By PYLE PURPLE
Staff Trotter

OU is home of the Pioneers, lack of sufficient parking spaces and the future dance craze, "The Goose Poop Shuffle."

The dance steps were inspired by everyday encounters with the droppings from our feathered friends from the north, according to Butch Keggman, 23, captain of the OU's male dance review The Shadows.

The 50-member dance review will perform the Shuffle during half time at this week's womens basketball game.

"The shhhi—stuff is every where you go. You'll be walking along the sidewalks and there it is. It's everywhere! Of course you don't want to step in it, so you jump out of the way. Luckily I'm a dancer and had years of tap, ballroom and oh-yeh aerobics so I can JUMP!" explained Keggman, a exercise science major.

The Goose Poop Shuffle is

The Shadow's rehearse the Goose Poop Shuffle which has been credited with building pride in Oakland. The dance troupe is scheduled to leave for an international tour next month but will perform during half-time of the women's basketball games before leaving.

"simple," according to Keggman.

First, stand with both feet together and arms at your side then starting with your right foot take two steps forward, look down, through your arms into the air and take a large jump to the right and then to the left. Repeat process at will.

"It's so easy, I really love it," Keggman said. "We came up with this dance to show people how easy it is to let nature be natural, even when you aren't."

CIPO is frantically employing members of the Review to instruct OU's trendy sheep-following students.

"Yeah, we know this will be hipper than hip-hop and everybody will just want to do this great dance and people here are stupid enough to pay to learn this crap," Keggman said. "Maybe the Poop Shuffle will become a national craze. Hell, Madonna started in Rochester so why can't we?"

Keggman said he feels that the dance has done more than keep everyone's shoes clean.

"It's really brought people together. We all have something to share now," he said.

Keggman said he is also proud to have found a vehicle to reach apathetic students who have never participated in anything before.

The OU administration is also proud of the recognition. Sources have confirmed that all catalogs and public relations pieces are being redone to include mention of the shuffle in the list of highlights.

"And to think we were all geeked about that U.S. News & World Report thing. Now we really have something to be proud of," he said.

Classes will be offered every hour, on the hour every week day for $20 per lesson. Sign up at the CIPO window.

Computer enhancement of OU's new first family after their first year.

Department predicts year's wear and tear on first family

By KYLE ASINTHECOLOR

Staff Schizophrenics (No we're not!!)

The Computer Science Department released a computer enhanced photo of the new President Sandy Packer and her husband Martain after a year at OU, yesterday.

The photo was released to confirm that the department can make good use of the compiled $35 hundred million in computer fees and that the faculty and staff has nothing to do, according to 16-year-old Eugene Nerdball, senior, one of contributors to the project.

The black and white eight and one half by 11 glossy photo depicts the Packers after their twelfth OU

Bored of Trustees meeting—weathered and seasoned, but experienced.

"We start with their current likeness and use the computer to enhance features that will change during their year at OU," Nerdball said, a general sciences/art therapy major.

After repeated unanswered phone calls to Sunburn Porch, the Packer's campus home, they were amazed at how the photo captured their likeness.

"Oh—my gooodness—I can't believe they caught me without my own lapel pin!" exclaimed Martain.

"It's O.K. dear—I'm the president of this fine institution," Sandy said.

Lecter look alike cooks-up choice chops in chef series

By BAZOOKA JOE
Staff Political/Food Writer

The CIPO Chef of the Week series continues by honoring newly-hired Marriott cook Bob Jones, this week.

Jones, who bears an uncanny resemblance to "Silence of the Lambs" character Dr. Hannibal Lecter, is assigned to Vandenberg cafeteria. He remains humble despite receiving the award.

"Well, I guess I do like to experiment with all sorts of new recipes," Jones said. "It is such an honor—I would have given an arm and a leg for this award."

Looking like Lecter has for some reason made it difficult for Jones to move up the culinary ladder, so he said he is glad to have the chance to cook for the residence halls students at OU.

"I think about those carbohydrate-loaded and fleshy students all the time. I really do want to make sure that they eat right," Jones said.

"Some of them are just too darn skinny."

A quiet man who enjoys sketching, sewing and chainsaw juggling, Jones lives in the basement of an abandoned home where he keeps a deep pit to accommodate all the students he invites over for dinner.

"I just love having students for dinner—I get so much hands-on feedback this way," Jones said.

The OU community will have the chance to sample the best of Jones' creations, although there are no vegetarian dishes, today at noon in the Fireside Lounge.

OU hopes DOPES learn by osmosis

"This concept is helpful to a lot of areas," beamed another financial expert. Graham Health Center staff will do the surgery, the book center will sell the subliminal tapes which are being prepared by the Psychology Department.

Scholars Tower residents vowed to encourage their twin tower colleagues by taping letter by letter messages, like "Think You Dinks", on windows facing the D.O.P.E.S. dorms.

Residence hall students, however, are furious with this development. "We had our own plans for next year."

Dorm students report overwhelming support for single sex halls, with curfews and visiting hours restricted to one Sunday afternoon a month.

Student Affairs officials, however, rejected that plan. "It could be catastrophic for our image, after all students affairs are what we monitor," said one.

In addition, the single sex for mat could spell financial ruin for the Graham Health Center which would be reduced to treating colds, flu and sinus infections. "We make a fortune on condoms and birth control pills, plus the sexually transmitted diseases are very profitable for us," reported another insider who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Andre counsels Pioneer tennis

I Andre Agassi, speaking as America's best tennis player of all time, I would like to say a few words about OU's tennis program.

Yeah, I lead a very rough life. It really is tough travelling all around the world, playing in tournaments for millions of dollars and being idolized by screaming New Kids on the Block fans - but it's something that members of OU's men's and women's tennis teams will never know.

God, what an advantage they have. They get to stay in one place all year 'round, never have to worry about the pressure of one million dollars looming over your head as a prize, and best of all, they can go anywhere they want without being recognized.

Sure, the level of tennis that the Pioneers usually play is nothing to write home about (or even in The Oakland Post, for that matter), but as long as they keep buying my Nike clothes, shoes and my Donnay tennis racket to lose with, you won't hear me complaining.

But, in the noble interest of keeping this tennis thing going here at OU, I, Andre Agassi, the world's greatest tennis player, offer the following suggestions;

- a tennis stadium needs to be built (to ensure good luck and good tennis, I suggest naming it the Andre Agassi Memorial Coliseum) so that the Pioneers can lose in a more comfortable atmosphere. Sitting in those broken wooden bleachers with the green paint flaking off and sticking to your clothes is definitely not cool with this Las Vegas dude. Maybe I can put a good word in with my buddies at the Australian Open, and they can give you some tips on how to build a really rockin' tennis palace.

- get some huge speakers and crank some Red Hot Chili Peppers tunes while the matches are being played. This way, OU's opponent will be confused and hopefully will drop some points the Pioneer way. Plus, this method worked pretty well for me in a Nike commercial that I filmed a few years ago. Let's just say that it brought my game to a "Higher Ground".

- get some really bizzare-looking uniforms. I highly recommend my line of clothing for the truly distinctive "I am a pseudo-tennis rebel" look. I really think that it is clothes that make the tennis player, not necessarily you game.

I look good when I play.

True, I probably couldn't beat John McEnroe, Pete Sampras, Jim Courier, Michael Chang, Stefan Edberg, Ivan Lendl, Andrei Chekasov, Aaron Krickstein, Bobby Riggs...but that's not the point.

I look good when I play.

Since the Pioneers seem to lose a lot, maybe more emphasis should be placed on how you guys look. Win style points, not service points.

- get an entourage. I always play better after hearing from my brother Phil and Nick Bolleteri how great I really am. I know it's true, I just need to hear more often.

Well, that's about it. I must return to my jet setting life. I must leave you mere tennis commoners behind.

Adios.

And remember this, Pioneers, image IS everything.

Amongst the beautiful rolling hills and wooded contour of pastoral Oakland University lies a diamond in the rough.

A paragon.

A blissful place that is before its time.

So before it's time and so aesthetically pleasing that Architectural Digest has named Lepley Sports Arena as the most beautiful and structurally sound athletic building in the United States.

As you walk up to Lepley you cannot help but notice the fluorescent barricades that accentuate the perfect symmetry of the sports center.

The barricades add a certain innocent and transient feeling that makes you feel like something earth-shattering is going to happen right before your eyes.

As you look through the barricades, you cannot help noticing the perfectly placed rubble around the steps.

Rubble that gives the sports center a Medieval touch and eerie aura as if there is some sort of impending doom.

The steps that lead you into Lepley conjure up pictures of the fallen Roman empire, and set the tone for what the observer will see inside.

"As I walked up to Lepley I began to shiver at the sheer sight of it. It's beautiful Romanesque style was positively bordering on orgasmic, but as I toured the inside of the exquisite facilities, I was downright speechless," noted architect, Frank Lloyd Wright, said.

Wright confided in me and said that after viewing Lepley, he would now have to re-evaluate his life and his art form. Wright also said that Lepley will serve as a blueprint for the future in architecture, and will also become the basis for his own designs.

In fact, Tom Monaghan has said he will use Lepley as model for the Tiger's new stadium.

"Lepley seemed to straddle the risque line of integrating archaic anachronisms and state-of-the-art trend setting features—truly the eighth wonder of the world," Wright said.

The perfectly manicured lawn and shrubs in front of the sports center are only foreplay for the senses, arousing them to an exciting apex.

This stimulation is necessary in order to tolerate the impending deluge of architectural greatness that will attack the senses.

As you enter the building, or should I say masterpiece, it is impossible not to notice the genuine bogus and spurious marble floor that wouldn't dirty, even if you waltzed in white silk stockings.

The left-wing of Lepley contains an indoor swimming facility fit for a king. The cathedral ceilings portray a graceful, well-wrought design. It is not hard to be swept off your feet and into the pool by the open and free atmosphere that the

Pioneer Person reveals secret life Pioneer Person... Before and After

By ANDREA AGASSI

Much to the surprise and horror of the OU Athletic Department, Pioneer man announced on Tuesday on the Geraldo Rivera Show that he is really a she.

Pioneer Person was Rivera's guest on Monday's show entitled "Sex Change Operations; My Personal Story".

"I had a sex change operation last year, after the women's swim team won the national title for the second time. I realized that the OU women have been more athletically successful than the men, so I didn't want to be Pioneer man anymore - but rather, a Pioneer woman," an excited Pioneer person said.

Other turning points that prompted Pioneer Person to make the change were; the women's basketball team reaching the Final Four in 1989 and the women's volleyball team winning or coming in second in the GLIAC for the past three years. Also, the disappointing performance of the men's basketball team proving the Greg Kampe Self-Destruction Axiom, (no matter how impressive the team may look at the start of the season, it will fall apart by the end of the year, guaranteed), played a role in Person's metaphorizing decision.

"I'm not embarrassed anymore to hang on the side of the gym, now that the truth has been told about what I really stand for. I'm sick and tired of standing around in the swimming pool area dressed only in a Speedo bathing suit. I want something more, like maybe a real bathing suit," Person empathically said.

INDIGESTION?: Architectural Digest has named Lepley Sports Arena as the most beautiful and structurally sound athletic building in the United States. This is the second time Oakland has been recognized in a national publication.

pool area radiates.

The right-wing of Lepley is a grand and stately ballroom with beautiful wood floors of the finest workmanship, but there is some speculation that basketball may be played there.

I cannot believe this preposterous falsehood, and I can see no veracity in the speculation of basketball being played in such a crafted and exquisite ballroom, for this would be a travesty of justice to even disrupt the virgin qualities of this grand ballroom.

Moving on, one can not ignore the long spiralling staircase that descends into the dungeon, oops I mean basement.

The descent toward the basement is something never-to-be-forgotten because a smell of sweet ambrosia overwhelms you as it penetrates your nasal cavities.

The basement is awe-inspiring and in a nutshell, the pinnacle of interior design.

The effect the lighting creates invokes a feeling of warmth and serenity.

The color scheme is not to be equalled. The hideous hues of yellow and brown can only be described in two words - Maximum Heinousity.

Lepley Sports Arena is truly a fornication of the senses and must be put on everyone's agenda as a "must see".

I have been an architecture expert for 23 years now, and I have never seen anything like it, or my name is not Hamlet Morrissey. I'm not going to Disney World, I'm going to Lepley Sports Arena

GQ praises Taylor for hoops fashion sense, awareness Daly considered a factor

By KALVIN KLEINE
and ANDREA AGASSI

In an announcement that has simply stunned the GLIAC fashion crowd, OU women's basketball coach Bob Taylor has been named as GQ Best-Dressed Basketball Coach for the 1991-2 season.

Taylor's signature outfit was a tailored, hip-length black cotton jacket and a darkly hued patterned shirt tucked into a pair of casual wrinkled dress slacks.

The coup d'etat of the ensemble were the thick, white athletic socks leering out of Taylor's cuffed pants. The socks brought a sense of the coach's fashion awareness, yet signalled the intent of his continued commitment to creating a basketball dynasty.

Of course, Taylor's choice of moccasin-sysle loafers reinforces his quintessential fashion intuitiveness.

"Not only are his teams impressive in nature, but his outfits are simply the icing on a very devastating cake for us. I will do whatever it takes to beat Oakland, even it means a new wardrobe," Michigan Tech women's basketball coach Kevin Boredseth said.

Wayne State's men's basketball coach Ron Hamsterye agreed. "When my team reached the NCAA's I was really unsure of what I should pack for the trip down to Kentucky."

"I gave Bob a call, since he's been to the big show before, and he suggested some really great ideas. He's definitely the clothes horse of the GLIAC," Hamsterye said. "Even though we lost, many people told me after the game how dashing I looked. I owe it all to Bob."

While Taylor was unable to accept the award in person, ever-present OU sports information director Andy Glintzman gratefully accepted it on his behalf.

"The real reason that Bob has won this award is all due to Chuck Daly and those Detroit Pistons being our personal Pioneer gym rats. Chuck's fashion style has really rubbed off on Bob," Glintzman said.

Glintzman could not comment on whether Taylor will be accepting an endorsement contract with Kuppenheimer men's clothiers a la Daly.

This was Daly's first loss of his fashion hoops title in ten years. He also was unavailable for comment on Taylor's victory over the one of NBA's most successful coaches.

Taylor was also commended by committee on his dashing, suave, yet arresting hair style. His grooming technique is quite simple; he simply runs his hands through his receding hairline and voila - his hair is properly and succinctly put in place.

He repeats this motion several times per game, to ensure that his hair will stop sticking straight up and to stop the referees from injustly calling fouls on the Pioneers.

The Basketball Fashion Committee was staffed by an ad hoc group of randomly selected basketball fashion plates.

The members and their respective qualifications were; University of Michigan stellar freshman Chris Webber, noted for his knee length baggier-than-thou shorts, ESPN's Dick Vitale, selected for his outstanding coiffeurs and finally, Indiana men's basketball coach Robert Montgomery Knight, picked for his trendy and tight IU sweaters.
