OU receives visiting professorship award

Oakland University's Department of Biological Sciences recently received its second Burroughs Wellcome Visiting Professorship Award.

"I am pleased that we have been chosen to receive a second award. This opportunity is possible in part because distinguished scientists from other institutions are willing to come to Oakland and share their latest findings," said Jill Zeilstra-Ryalls, assistant professor, Biological Sciences. "The first visiting professorship event was very successful, and we are looking forward to equal success this year."

Through this award, a visiting scientist will spend up to five days at Oakland, engage in teaching and discussion with students and faculty, and deliver a lecture on a subject pertinent to his or her discipline.
