Elliott-Stinson Challenge makes small gifts transformational

OU alumni are taking advantage of the Elliott-Stinson Challenge Match to transform students' lives.

In one case, some of Professor Frank Cardimen's former students in the School of Business Administration (SBA) believe so strongly in the value his MBA international travel course offers that they have contributed enough money to underwrite a number of $1,000 scholarships for this year's participants, as well as written testimonials about their experiences.

In another, an alumnus in Hong Kong e-mailed about his desire to personally help three SBA students travel to China and participate in the study-abroad program the SBA is offering with OU's School of Engineering and Computer Science.

Whether you give $50, $500 or more, you can be part of the transformation of Oakland University's School of Business Administration. To take advantage of the Elliott-Stinson Match Challenge, which runs through October 31, 2009, contribute online at www.sba.oakland.edu/give or contact Robin Michel, SBA development officer, at michel@oakland.edu or (248) 370-2121.
