

Thursday, April 15, 2004

Ronald Sudol

Professor of Rhetoric, Communication and Journalism

As director of the Meadow Brook Writing Project, Ronald Sudol excels at developing the writing skills of secondary teachers. Profiled by the National Writing Project as one of the most innovative and exciting programs in the nation, the project developed a strong network last year, which brought master's teachers and new teachers together to support the development of younger writing teachers. In addition, Sudol successfully prepared the grant, which underwrites the project, and recruited nearly 20 high school teachers to attend the writing program on campus.

Sudol earned his Ph.D. degree from the State University of New York at Stony Brook, his M.A. from Brown University and his B.A. from St. Michael's College.

During his 27 years at Oakland, he has published a textbook and been editor/co-editor of four collections of essays. He has written dozens of professional articles and received several grants, including two from the National Endowment for the Humanities. He serves as a consultant on language arts curriculum and assessment for the Educational Testing Service, The College Board and Michigan Department of Education, in addition to school districts and publishers. Sudol also serves as associate provost of Oakland University.

SUMMARY

As director of the Meadow Brook Writing Project, Ronald Sudol excels at developing the writing skills of secondary teachers. Profiled by the National Writing Project as one of the most innovative and exciting programs in the nation, the project developed a strong network last year, which brought master's teachers and new teachers together to support the development of younger writing teachers. In addition, Sudol successfully prepared the grant, which underwrites the project, and recruited nearly 20 high school teachers to attend the writing program on campus.

Created by CareTech Administrator (webservices@caretechsolutions.com) on Thursday, April 15, 2004
Modified by CareTech Administrator (webservices@caretechsolutions.com) on Thursday, April 15, 2004
Article Start Date: Friday, April 9, 2004