JOB RECRUITING ACTIVITY UP

One barometer—the university placement office—indicates renewed confidence in the future of the U.S. economy.

Ron Kevern, director of career advising and placement for Oakland University, reports recruiting activity up 75 percent over 1974-75. Some 250 recruiters have already scheduled campus visits.

"Many employers speak of an improved labor market with a much improved market in the second quarter of 1976," Kevern says. He notes that some recruiters who regularly visited the campus until the last year or two are now back, some for multiple visits. General Motors is among those returning to campus.

In addition, many of the alumni who visited the placement office during the past year for assistance during layoffs have either been recalled to work or found other employment. Throughout the downturn, a college education was a "hedge" against unemployment.

In the most recent issue of "UpDate," the publication of the College Placement Council, college-educated persons made up the smallest percentage of those unemployed. Of the 8.4 million jobless at the time of publication in late summer, some 415,000 or only 2.9 percent of the total were those with four or more years of college, Kevern says.

Among the current high demand areas for graduates are engineering, accounting and management, the health sciences, learning disabilities, and computer and information sciences. Graduates in the hard sciences are of interest to employers, Kevern says.

The director warns that employers are still looking for only the top students in their respective fields. His advi e for students--begin career planning early, be prepared to change geographic locations to land that first job, and be prepared to have to "sell yourself and your skills" to a prospective employer.
