Divers Hoping to Find Treasure

Rumored Rich Cargo of Sunken Ship Spurs Expedition's Efforts

WASHINGTON — In the will-o-the-wisp world of lost treasures, many are sought but few are found. An exception may be the sunken cargo of an East Indian man, the Grosvenor, whose battered hull is being investigated by a diving expedition off South Africa's east coast.

In January, 1952, the 800-ton Grosvenor sailed from Trincomalee, Ceylon, for Cape Town, Africa, says the National Geographic Magazine.

CARRIED FORTUNE
She is believed to have carried a fabulous fortune in gold and silver bars, coins, ivory, precious stones, and pearls. Also aboard may have been two gem-encrusted gold peacocks from the throne of the Great Mogul at New Delhi — an extra touch of romance in a treasure valued today as high as $30,000,000.

On the last lap of her journey, off the desolate Pondoland coast, the Grosvenor ran into bad weather. About 30 miles northeast of what is now Port St. Johns, she was trapped between rocks and broken up.

Captain John Coxon and most of his crew and passengers managed to get ashore. But it was across a wild and hostile region that they set out for the Cape, many hundreds of miles away.

SURVIVORS
Only eight men made it. According to the exhausted and dazed survivors, Capt. Coxon had organized his original group into two parties. The remnant of one reached Cape Town. The other, under the captain's leadership, vanished into the wild, where apparently all perished from hunger and thirst or were killed by tribesmen.

As the years passed, gold and silver coins washed up on the Pondoland shore kept the tale of the Grosvenor fortune alive. Cannon and boxlike objects on the ocean floor were reported by occasional daring divers.

So far, however, strong tides and the violent breakers that pound this rocky coast have defied the efforts of all treasure seekers, from large and well-financed combines to imaginative individuals.

BORER TUNNEL
In 1906, one ambitious group bored an undersea tunnel to within 40 feet of the ship's hull, then abandoned the work for lack of capital.

Some 40 years later, a South African engineer considered a fantastic scheme of covering the ship with tons of rock, topped by cement reaching above the water's surface. He then proposed to drill from the top to the prize, pumping out water as is done in sinking oil wells. Later, he decided simply to build a protective jetty around the wreck — a project that also failed.

Palladium is being used in some types of new jewelry to replace platinum. It is said to cost one-fourth as much and has the quality of being strong, light and easily workable.
