Starting Monday, March 15, eligible students can begin registering by class standing and earned credit hours for fall 2010 and winter 2011 classes.

Oakland students should make an academic advising appointment as soon as possible to discuss their course selections for the upcoming year. OU academic advisers also review progress toward fulfillment of degree requirements and interpret and clarify policies and procedures. Undergraduate students should go to the Academic Advising Contact Web page for a list of advising contacts in each school or college. Graduate students should contact their academic department.

Graduate students may register on Monday, March 15. Senior students with 121 credits or more may register on Tuesday, March 16, and with 91 credits or more may register on Wednesday, March 17. Junior students with 73 or more credits may register on Thursday, March 18, and with 56 credits or more may register on Friday, March 19. Sophomore students with 42 credits or more may register on Monday, March 22, and with 28 credits may register on Tuesday, March 23. Freshman students with 16 credits or more are eligible to register on Wednesday, March 24, and entering freshman with less than 16 credits may register on Thursday, March 25.

Other tips to help prepare students for combined fall and winter registration include:

- Checking your SAIL account for any holds or unpaid bills that may prevent you from registering on time.
- Verifying that you meet the prerequisites for the course before you try to register for it. Look for the prerequisites in the graduate and/or undergraduate catalog or on the Class Schedule Search.
- Having your first-choice classes on a list, with a couple alternatives, so you can register promptly without having to search when a class is full. Just go to the Class Schedule Search.
- Registering for fall courses before winter to avoid registration errors.
