Elizabeth Smart, who captured the nation's attention when she was abducted from her home in 2002, will speak at Oakland University at 7 p.m. on Thursday, March 21, in the Oakland Center Founders Ballrooms. A book signing will take place immediately following her talk.

Elizabeth Smart, who was held captive from June 2002 to March 2003, will share her story of strength and courage on March 21 at OU.

Smart's story drew national headlines, from when she was taken at knifepoint on June 5, 2002, to when police safely returned her to her family on March 12, 2003. Held prisoner for nine grueling months, Smart emerged a symbol of perseverance and strength when she triumphantly testified before her captor and the world about her private nightmare.

Through this traumatic experience, Smart has become a leading advocate for change related to child abduction, recovery programs and national legislation. She is founder of the Elizabeth Smart Foundation, which is dedicated to preventing crimes against children.

She has also helped promote The National AMBER Alert, The Adam Walsh Child Protection & Safety Act and other similar efforts. Her abduction and recovery continues to encourage broad vigilance and motivate parents, law enforcement and leaders worldwide to focus on children's safety.

Smart chronicled her experiences in the New York Times bestseller, My Story. She also worked with other abduction survivors and the U.S. Department of Justice to create You're Not Alone: The Journey From Abduction to Empowerment, a survivors guide intended to encourage and help children who have gone through similar experiences. Smart released her latest book, Where There's Hope, in spring 2018.
