Anthony Tuf Francis, assistant professor in the Department of Teacher Development and Educational Studies has recently been invited to be a panelist at a summit meeting at the University of Michigan.

TeachingWorks is partnering with the Branch Alliance for Teacher Educator Diversity (BranchED) to host a summit for teacher educators focused on practice-based teacher education on February 11-13, 2018. This event will bring together faculty members from approximately ten minority-serving institutions (MSIs) and historically black colleges and university (HBCU's) from across the country, with the goal of introducing participants to practice-based teacher education and unpacking how it can be an effective framework for preparing beginning teachers.

Congratulations to Tuf!

IN THE NEWS

International Women's Table

In order to bring together female leaders within the Galileo-Saudi Arabia program with other outstanding women in educational leadership, Dr. Suzanne Klein and Dr. Anne Donato have created the International Women's Table. Its mission is to break boundaries in educational leadership by breaking bread and bringing voices together from across the globe in robust and reflective conversation – to share, inquire, learn and grow – in order to broaden mentorship, support and understanding of each other's leadership work and potential.

Over lunch, program participants are able to interact with female leaders from within and outside the OU's campus – asking questions and hearing personal stories of guest speakers' journeys in rising to various levels of educational leadership. Featured speakers have included Dr. Janet Graetz, Dr. Julie Ricks-Donoen, and Dr. Leigh Dzwik; in addition to Dr. Claudia Petrescu from the Office of Graduate Studies and others throughout the Metro Detroit area.

The International Women's Table has allowed those involved to reach beyond themselves and enter a new level of educational leadership one meal and personal story at a time.
