

Tuesday, April 22, 2003

Robert Jarski

Robert Jarski, associate professor of exercise science, came to Oakland in 1985 as a visiting associate professor and today is an associate professor in the School of Health Sciences. His diverse background includes a Ph.D. in medical education from the University of Iowa, and he is a certified physician assistant, with post-graduate training in general surgery.

His honors this past year include being named a Fellow and Diplomat of the American Association of Integrative Medicine. His scholarly accomplishments include three publications that deal with medical and educational interventions that promote good health. In addition, Jarski was invited to participate at five regional and national conferences dealing with topics ranging from complementary therapy following surgery to managing stress using alternative and integrative approaches.

SUMMARY

Robert Jarski, associate professor of exercise science, came to Oakland in 1985 as a visiting associate professor and today is an associate professor in the School of Health Sciences. His diverse background includes a Ph.D. in medical education from the University of Iowa, and he is a certified physician assistant, with post-graduate training in general surgery.

Created by CareTech Administrator (webservices@caretechsolutions.com) on Tuesday, April 22, 2003

Modified by CareTech Administrator (webservices@caretechsolutions.com) on Tuesday, April 22, 2003

Article Start Date: Monday, October 27, 2003