

Thursday, April 15, 2004

Lizabeth Barclay

Professor of Management and Marketing

With teaching responsibilities in the areas of organizational behavior and human resource management, Lizabeth Barclay often encounters students who are frustrated by the inherent ambiguity of these fields. To address this, she presents students with assignments that challenge their attitudes and offers them opportunities to make decisions where there may be no correct answer.

A dedicated professor, Barclay remains very accessible to her students. She believes that learning can occur during "out of the classroom" moments and she can often be found with her organizational research students until the lab closes for the night and even later in the classroom.

Since 1988, Barclay has been the faculty adviser for the award-winning Oakland University chapter of the Society for Human Resource Management. To stay current in her dynamic and ever-changing field, Barclay engages in a heavy schedule of continuous training as well as regular participation in teaching-related conferences.

SUMMARY

With teaching responsibilities in the areas of organizational behavior and human resource management, Lizabeth Barclay often encounters students who are frustrated by the inherent ambiguity of these fields. To address this, she presents students with assignments that challenge their attitudes and offers them opportunities to make decisions where there may be no correct answer.

Created by CareTech Administrator (webservices@caretechsolutions.com) on Thursday, April 15, 2004
Modified by CareTech Administrator (webservices@caretechsolutions.com) on Thursday, April 15, 2004
Article Start Date: Friday, April 9, 2004