

Wednesday, August 29, 2001

Associate vice president for development hired

Oakland University officials recently announced the appointment of Timothy J. Broderick as associate vice president for development.

"We are pleased to have someone with Tim's background on board with us to enhance our fund-raising efforts," said Susan Davies Goepf, vice president for University Relations and executive director of the Oakland University Foundation. "As we move toward launching our first comprehensive capital campaign, Tim's past experiences will be invaluable to our success."

Broderick is an Oakland University graduate and has more than 20 years of experience in fund raising. Previously, he served as director of development for Walsh College, the executive director of the Providence Hospital Foundation, director of development for Harper Hospital & Detroit Medical Center, director of the annual fund for the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, and director of corporate and foundation relations for the University of Detroit.

SUMMARY

Oakland University officials recently announced the appointment of Timothy J. Broderick as associate vice president for development.

Created by CareTech Administrator (webservices@caretechsolutions.com) on Wednesday, August 29, 2001

Modified by CareTech Administrator (webservices@caretechsolutions.com) on Wednesday, August 29, 2001

Article Start Date: Friday, December 5, 2003