

CONTRIBUTORS

Alice Carleton performs clerical services for the Department of Mathematics and Statistics. She has contributed to The Oakland Journal in the past with a short memoir. Her poetry efforts recently found welcome encouragement from Elie Wiesel: “(poetry) shows your compassionate response to suffering.”

Natalie B. Cole, a faculty member since 1988, is an Associate Professor in the English Department. Her areas of research and teaching include Dickens, Victorian literature and culture, medicine and the body, and sensation and crime fiction. Her essay, “Travel, the Road and the City in Adaptations of GREAT EXPECTATIONS,” appeared in L’UNIVERSO SENZA CONFINI DI CHARLES DICKENS (Rome, Italy: Arachne) in the fall of 2006.

Kristine Condic is Associate Professor in Kresge Library. She is Coordinator of Reference, Coordinator of Electronic Resources, and Co-Chair KL Web Team.

David A. Dulio has taught American Politics at Oakland University since 2002. His PhD in political science is from the American University in Washington, DC. One of his recent books (with Candice J. Nelson) is Vital Signs: Perspectives on the Health of American Campaigning, Brookings Institution Press, 2006.

Sherman Folland is Professor of Economics. He publishes numerous articles focusing on health economics. With two colleagues, he is also author of the leading textbook in that field, The Economics of Health and Health Care

Geri Graham is an Oakland University alumnus (SBA '86) and Director of Project Upward Bound here on campus. She administers one of the largest single-source grants at OU for this college preparatory program which celebrated its 40th consecutive year at OU in summer 2006.

Paul Graves teaches philosophy at Oakland University. His specialties include: History of modern Western philosophy (especially Locke), symbolic logic, and philosophy of language. He attained his PhD from UC-Irvine.

Shayla Hawkins is a Detroit native and graduated with a baccalaureate degree in English from Oakland University in 1998. She wishes to thank Dr. Johnson for his patience, courtesy and time, and the OU English Department for making her undergraduate journey through literature so informative and illuminating.

Don Matthews whose doctorate in history is from the University of Chicago, focuses on middle east history. His recent book, Confronting an Empire, Constructing a Nation: Arab Nationalists and Popular Politics in Mandate Palestine was published by I.B. Tauris in 2006.

Sean Farrell Moran, OU history professor, specializes in Modern Britain and Europe, Ireland, the history of ideas, and terrorism. He has published numerous chapters, articles, and reviews and is the author of a book Patrick Pearse and the Politics of Redemption, Catholic University Press, 1994. Most recently he authored "History, Memory, and the Teaching of Irish History" a chapter in The Readings of Irish History, ed., Lawrence McBride, Four Courts Press, 2004.

Brian Murphy is Emeritus Professor of English at Oakland University and continues to be a member of the editorial staff of The Oakland Journal. Brian directed the Honors College from 1985 to 2002

Kevin J. Murphy is Professor of Economics in the School of Business Administration. Kevin contributes regularly to the prominent journals in his field of labor economics. Prior to the present publication, he explained election issues for the readers of The Detroit Free Press.

Traci Rhoades is Basketball Operations Assistant in the Athletics Administration. She is a graduate of Missouri State and came to OU from the Missouri Valley Conference. She holds the Bachelor of Science degree in communication with an emphasis in public relations. You can reach Traci at rhoades@oakland.edu.

Alberto G. Rojo is Associate Professor of Physics. His recent grants include an NSF and a Sloan Foundation grant. Alberto is from Argentina. He was recently named the recipient of the "Jack Williamson Endowed Chair in Science and the Humanities" from the University of Eastern New Mexico. rojo@oakland.edu.

Peter F. Trumbore, joined the faculty of Political Science in 2002 with a PhD from the University of Connecticut. Peter studies international relations. His most recent publication is “First Use of Violent Force in Militarized Interstate Disputes, 1980–2001,” Journal of Peace Research, 2006 43(6), 741–749 (with Mary Caprioli).

Susan Wood is Professor of Art History and chaired that department 2002–2006. Her work features the art of ancient Greece and Rome. She attained her doctorate from Columbia University. Her book, Imperial Women: A Study in Public Images, 40 BC-AD 68 was published by Brill Academic Publishers.