

Wednesday, November 14, 2001

Third Oakland Journal issue published

By Jennifer Charney, OU Staff Writer

The "Oakland Journal" will showcase writing by OU community members in its third issue, to be distributed later in November to faculty and staff. The journal features articles, reviews, poetry and other literary work by OU faculty, staff, students and alumni.

The publication's mission is to provide intellectually stimulating reading and help build community spirit, said editor Geoff Brieger, professor, Department of Chemistry.

Here's a sample of the third issue's contents:

- "A Sufi Movement in Modern Bangladesh," by Peter J. Bertocci, professor, Department of Sociology and Anthropology
- "What's Good For the University?" Ronald M. Horwitz, professor, Finance, School of Business Administration (SBA); Sharon L. Howell, professor, Department of Rhetoric, Communication and Journalism; Frances C. Jackson, associate professor, School of Nursing; David R. Maines, professor, Sociology and Anthropology; Virinder K. Moudgil, interim vice president for Academic Affairs and provost; Kevin J. Murphy, professor, Economics, SBA; and Mary L. Otto, dean, School of Education and Human Services
- "Is Science a Religion?" by Michael D. Sevilla, professor, Department of Chemistry
- "The Soda Pop Monopoly, or How I Learned to Love Pepsi: Observations from the Dismal Science," by Sherman T. Folland, associate professor, Economics

Students and alumni may pick up a copy at the Department of Chemistry office, 262 SEB, or by e-mailing Brieger.

The journal welcomes articles from all disciplines and arts represented at Oakland University. The publication's associate editors are Sherman Folland, associate professor of Economics and Brian Murphy professor of English and associate director of the Honors College.

Authors may write on any topic, but the editors encourage contributions based on personal research, art or expertise.

SUMMARY

The "Oakland Journal" will showcase writing by OU community members in its third issue, to be distributed later in November to faculty and staff.

Created by CareTech Administrator (webservices@caretechsolutions.com) on Wednesday, November 14, 2001

Modified by CareTech Administrator (webservices@caretechsolutions.com) on Wednesday, November 14, 2001

Article Start Date: Thursday, January 19, 2006