Educational Leadership Students and Instructor Host MASSP Twitter Chat

Earlier this fall, first year M.Ed. in Educational Leadership students joined moderator, Jennifer Hammond, in hosting the weekly Michigan Association of Secondary School Principals (MASSP) Twitter Chat. This chat, titled "Supporting the New Generation of Educational Leaders" was an opportunity for practicing school leaders from around the state to share insight, advice, tips and suggestions with our M.Ed. students.

Dr. Hammond is the principal of Grand Blanc High School and serves as a part-time instructor for the M.Ed. in Educational Leadership. She holds an Ed.S. and Ph.D. from Oakland University.

Danielle Ligocki Presents at AESE

Dr. Danielle T. Ligocki, new faculty member in TDES, presented "Show Me the Love, When Everyone Else is Showing Me the Test" at the annual conference for American Educational Studies Association. Dr. Ligocki and her co-author, Dr. Martha Wilkins of Chicago Public Schools, shared their investigation into the biases of standardized assessments and the far-reaching, negative implications for minority students.

Her work urged researchers and practitioners to move beyond the incessant test-taking strategies and focus on passing these biased assessments and instead concentrate more on radical love in the classroom and infusing an ethic of care in all learning environments.
