

Wednesday, August 29, 2001

Lifelong Learning launches new Web site

By Jeff Samoray, OU Web Writer

The Lifelong Learning Department recently launched a new Web site to help students obtain information on all continuing education and professional development courses at Oakland University.

Site visitors can perform a search of all offerings by category or keyword and obtain course dates, descriptions and contacts for additional information. Web links are provided to the individual departments for more information, including a link to the Office of Graduate Study.

"We wanted one place for students to visit to learn about all the continuing education and professional development opportunities at OU," said Christina Grabowski, associate director of Graduate Study and Lifelong Learning. "Because continuing education and professional development are decentralized, students don't always know who to call or where to go for information. The Web site is a way of expanding our customer service to our lifelong learning population."

Lifelong Learning at Oakland University encompasses continuing education and professional development opportunities for students interested in furthering their education and training through credit and non-credit offerings. The program also includes degree and certificate programs that are conveniently delivered to students in their home and work communities.

SUMMARY

The Lifelong Learning Department recently launched a new Web site to help students obtain information on all continuing education and professional development courses at Oakland University.

Created by CareTech Administrator (webservices@caretechsolutions.com) on Wednesday, August 29, 2001
Modified by CareTech Administrator (webservices@caretechsolutions.com) on Wednesday, August 29, 2001
Article Start Date: Friday, December 5, 2003